MELISSA McRAY, HIGHLAND, MEETS SANTA

But the Wait Was Worth It

By Tim Schuster

KINGSTON

A dozen kids waited in line in the damp cold of a shopping center parking lot, the smaller ones clutching their parents' hands. They peered forward as each in turn climbed the wooden stairs and strode across the platform to meet Santa Claus, some half in awe with tightly clenched hands and eyes darting about and others with the brisk aplomb of seasoned Christmas experts.

Some parents stood by nervously, as if eager to hustle their young charges away now that their sense of duty had been fulfilled. Others watched smiling as the old man in red and white bent over the small supplicant, speaking lowly and in confidence, and then listening to the earnest recitation.

We spoke with several of Santa's "helpers" in the Kingston area Saturday afternoon as shoppers thronged commerical centers with perhaps the first of the big weekends of spending to culminate in a month.

What do the kids want? we asked. The answer came as no surprise — "Toys." There were very few exceptions. Leave mother to worry about school clothes. A Santa Claus "helper" remembered that three children in a row once asked for clothes, but they were all in the same family and had apparently been influenced by mother's suggestions, he said.

But not just any toys. From three to about 10 years old, the kids know exactly what their individual hearts are set on and, not surprisingly, television advertising seems to be a major factor, said several Santa's aides.

They'll say, "I want a daisy love doll that moves and wets," or, "You know that Tonka truck with the part that goes around." At one location the perennial favorite Lincoln Logs was oft requested.

"Most of them have it down pat," said a Santa "helper" "Some have memorized a long list; others are very unselfish and ask for presents for other people in their family."

What do you tell them about the list? "I tell them they will get what they ask for," said this Santa "helper." "But sometimes I feel bad about it."

Another "helper," who has been listening to the children for the past three years at his location, said he had full grown children of his own "I don't tell them they'll get it," he said. "I just tell them to be good." He mentioned Superman and Planet of the Apes as characters that seem to have captured the imaginations of the very young.

Of his role as a "helper" for Santa Claus he commented, "The children take it very seriously." He obviously did, too. "Oh, what do you want for Christmas?" we asked Santa's "helper" as we turned to leave. "I really haven't had time to think about it," said the old gent

Labor in Nuclear Power Corner

POUGHKEEPSIE

Joining the electric utility industry and state agencies in New York State in the push for development of nuclear power generating capacity is another major public sector — labor.

Representatives of the three sectors, who joined together Nov. 7 to form the New York State Committee for Jobs and Energy Independence, have just completed a six-stop tour of the state promoting the cause of nuclear electric power for the Empire State.

In speaking of "labor," it is referred specifically to the New York State Building and Construction Trades Council. Its president, former U.S. Secretary of Labor Peter Brennan, feels the state "is on the road to an energy default"

The Trades Council is joined in this tour by executives from the seven private electric utilities of the Empire State Power Resources, Inc. (ESPRI) and the public Power Authority of the State of New York, lumped together in a press release as "the eight major electric systems in New York State"

The stance taken by the group that addressed six regional labor meetings (including one Nov. 19 in Newburgh) is based on Brennan's statement, "We believe it absolutely essential for New York State to have adequate energy supplies in the future to assure jobs for all its citizens and maintain its economic health."

So the State Committee for Jobs and Energy Independence follows this line of reasoning: "If the utilities are not allowed to build nuclear plants they will have to switch to coal and oil. Coal plants have to be a part of the fuel mix but adequate supplies of electricity cannot be generated by coal alone. The country's railroads, mines, mining methods and laws are not geared up to deal with an exclusive coal economy. Oil plants will make this nation even more dependent on foreign fuels . . a risky policy, as we saw during the Arab Oil Embargo"

Said Brennan, "The public has been harangued with horror stories about nuclear power long enough . . . During these twenty years not a single worker nor a member of the public has been injured by nuclear power."

A graph accompanying lectures shows projected United States energy sources in the year 2,000 with nuclear at about 20 per cent; solar only two to five; geothermal one per cent; garbage one; hydroelectric one to two; and the other 70 to 75 per cent from fossil fueld (coal, oil, imports, shale oil).

Addressing builders in Newburgh and urging their action in support of nuclear power were the top executives: Dean B Seigfried, president, Orange and Rockland Utilities, Inc.; Theodore J. Carlson, board chairman and principal officer, Central Hudson Gas and Electric Corp.; George T. Berry, general manager and chief engineer, Power Authority of the State of New York; Dr. Joe C. Turnage, manager, Technical Resources Group, Yankee Atomic Electric Company, Marc W. Goldsmith, president, Energy Research Group.

In a booklet published by the "eight major electric systems" entitled Nuclear Electric Power for the Empire State, it is reported, "There are four major issues to be addressed. reactor safety, plutonium, high level radioactive waste management and the safeguarding of nuclear facilities and material against sabotage or terrorist activity." All can be solved, it was felt.

After describing the multitudinous quality control mechanisms and physical barriers that contribute to generating plant safety, the group comments ". . . there is no such thing as absolute safety. There is some degree of risk associated with any human endeavor, whether it is the individual decision to drive an automobile or the societal decision to use alternating electric current as a source of power."

Crowded Schools . . . Juggling Proposed

KINGSTON

The State Department of Education has suggested several juggling acts for Kingston schools, moving various grade levels from one building to another.

A team of state employes in September evaluated the schools in the Kingston City School District and came up with a number of shuffles designed to "help alleviate the high school situation and save money for the district," according to board Building Committee Chairlady Evelyn Corsones.

Contacted for an explanation of the sparse outline released, Mrs. Corsones said board members had just received the information last week, had one "practice session" with it, and had forwarded the rough draft to the administration for its remarks.

One section of the draft recommends phasing out the use of the three oldest elementary school buildings—Meagher, Brigham, and Truth —in a move to save money Mrs Corsones emphasized that this suggestion was based on the assumption that older schools (Truth is 97 — an addition was built in 1888) cost more to run and did not take into account such factors as location, and she said that the board was not considering undertaking such a move in the foreseeable future.

The state's suggestions are made with a district population decrease assumed by 1980 of more than 1,000 students in the elementary sector No one knows if this is valid

The suggestion in the elementary level is to convert the Edson School to a junior high school

Now, with the individual school capacities taken into account and the expected population and program necessities of 1980 suppposedly included, the four alternative approaches are detailed.

• Plan A—move the (7-9) students from MJM to Edson and use MJM and Kingston High for grades (10-12)

• Plan B—move (7-9) students from MJM to Lake Katrine Elementary and use MJM and Kingston High for grades (10-12).

• Plan C—move (10-12) students from Kingston High and transfer either J Watson Bailey or M. Clifford Miller students to develop a (7-9) campus with MJM. A (10-12) campus would be developed with Edson Elementary plus J. Watson Bailey, or at Lake Katrine with M. Clifford Miller.

• Plan D—A (7-12) program would be developed at Edson and J. Watson Bailey, or at Lake Katrine and M Clifford Miller, by transferring (10-12) students to either campus while a (7-12) program would continue at MJM and Kingston High.

Of course, any plan moving students about on such a scale, especially if some neighborhood schools are closed or if high school facilities were to be split up on more than one campus, would require a comprehensive approach to busing

In charge of the survey was William B. Haessig, chief adviser of planning location with the education department, with the heads of elementary and secondary education John T Bochenek and Dominick DeSimone making a visit. A health a safety survey also has reportedly been submitted

MASSIVE EARTHSLIDE TRIGGERED BY BIG QUAKE IN HILO, HAWAII (UPI)

Quakes, Big Waves Hit Hawaii

HILO, Hawaii (UPI) — Two strong earthquakes, the second the most powerful to hit Hawaii in more than a century, Saturday triggered an eruption in the Kilauea volcano, touched off landslides and swirled five-foot waves into the big island.

One camper was drowned and another disappeared when they were washed out to sea. Nineteen others were injured and taken to a hospital.

Beaches around the island were evacuated, and there was a tidal alert.

Lava shot 100 feet into the air from the Kilauea volcano. Later there was still lava spattering along the east wall of the volcano's Halemaumau firepit.

Vehicles were ruined by landslides and waves but no motorists were reported to have suffered serious injuries. Nineteen boats in harbors were damaged by the increased wave activity.

Police said a preliminary survey indicated property damage was $500,000.

Boy Scouts, fishermen and others had been camping overnight at Halape, 12 miles from the Kilauea crater. Waves washed over them, the earth opened up and rocks fell from above.

A spokesman at a military camp at Lilauea said that after the quakes the waves were so strong several persons were washed out to sea. They were washed back by follow-up waves. He said three persons suffered serious injuries.

Dr. Robert Tilling, scientist in charge of the Volcanoes National Park observatory, said many aftershocks were recorded. He said the first temblor occurred at 3:36 a.m. HST and it measured 5.2 on the Richter scale.

The second came at 4.20 a.m. HST and it measured 7.3.

Tilling said the aftershocks indicated molten lava was moving under the earth. He added he was unable to predict whether there would be any more powerful jolts.

Police said the plate glass windows in stores were shattered and plaster fell from ceilings. Officers said one house in Hilo was leveled and two park pavilions in Punaluu were wiped out.

Civil defense spokesman Fred Pugarelli said initially there were no known deaths or injuries in the quake that struck early Saturday. The park spokesman said he did not have immediate details on how the campers eluded further fatalities.

Five-foot waves swept in on Hilo Bay triggered by the quake, the second of two tremors that rumbled through the island in less than an hour. Sirens shrieked in Hilo about 30 miles to the north, and the entire downtown area of the city was blocked off to prevent looting. Roads buckled near the volcano, and electricity was knocked out.

Officials went door-to-door in the pre-dawn hours to evacuate hundreds of Hawaii County residents The water level jumped one inch

A restaurant and bar were swept away at Punaluu, about 50 miles southwest of Hilo on the south coast. A house collapsed in Hilo. There were three aftershocks. And condominium residents along the beach fled in panic for the high ground.

The U.S Geological Survey office said the second temblor at Kilauea was of "major proportions," registering a magnitude fof 7.3 on the Richter scale. It said the earlier one measured 5.2.

No Lottery for Two Months

ALBANY, N.Y. — It will be "at least two months" before the state lottery, swept clean by Gov. Hugh L. Carey Friday, is back in operation, a Carey spokesman said.

The search is under way for a "nationally recognized" lottery expert to sort out the trouble-plagued lottery, already shut down for a month.

In the meantime, the Carey spokesman said, no new lottery games will he held, although unfinished drawings will be completed.

11th Hour U.N Try

UNITED NATIONS, N Y — The Security Council conferred into the night Saturday in an eleventh-hour attempt to work out an extension of the mandate keeping the U.N. peacekeeping forces on the Golan Heights between Syrian and Israeli troops.

Diplomats said strong U.S objections to linking the extension to representation by the Palestine Liberation Organization at a council meeting in January was deadlocking the talks

Moon's 'Fanatic' Aims

NEW YORK — Korean evangelist Sun Myung Moon, the spiritual head of the Unification Church, is "fanatically interested" in obtaining political power in the United States, the New York Daily News reported Saturday.

"Their chief tasks are to bring new members to the rapidly growing movement and raise millions of dollars to bankroll his scheme to control America, and ultimately the world, in the name of God," the article said.

Two Close Air Calls

CHICAGO — The American Airlines jumbo jet which almost collided with another plane in Michigan Wednesday had scared an air controller at O'Hare International Airport just hours earlier, the Federal Aviation Administration said Saturday.

An FAA investigation of the Chicago incident showed the American plane got fairly close to another aircraft—but never so close that there was anything to worry about "The minimum separation is 1,000 feet, and it (the distance between the planes) was near the minimum," an FAA spokesman said "If it had been less, it would have been something to pursue further.

Tories Win 'Down Under'

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — The conservative National party ousted the Labor party from power Saturday in one of the biggest election upsets in New Zealand history.

Nearly complete results gave the National party an overwhelming 53-seat majority in New Zealand's 87-member House of Representatives, a gain of 21 seats.

The nationwide election, a nearly complete turnabout from Labor's 1972 landslide parliamentary victory, brought the business-farmer Nationals to power for three years.

Body Found

HURLEY

The mystery of the disappearance of 70-year-old Harvey Frederickson of Hurley was solved when a hunter came across his decomposed body hidden on an inaccessible rock ledge on Hurley Mountain.

His discharged shotgun was found nearby A verdict of suicide was issued by Ulster County Coroner Arthur Chipp after an autopsy, said state police

Dozens of searchers combed the face of Hurley Mountain and surrounding area for more than a week after Frederickson, of Ulster Trailer Park, was last seen leaving his home Aug 4 when he told his wife he was going fishing

His car was found with a suicide note on a woods road near Dug Hill Road that same day, and it was noted his shotgun was gone Fearing the worst, Department of Environmental Conservation rangers, Ulster County deputies, volunteers, and then state police searched the area with helicopters and then bloodhounds — to no avail They found only a torn sleeve from his shirt, a disappointing conclusion for Mrs Frederickson

Said one trooper Saturday, 'He apparently didn't want to be found" Frederickson's body was not located when the area was searched "He had worked himself into a crevice," said the trooper

The elderly man, reportedly despondent last summer, was apparently dead "for a long time," said police The case will be closed when a ballistics test is received back from Albany, they said

The body was found on Friday in a densely wooded and rocky sloping area between Dug Hill Road and Eagles Nest Road He was 1½ miles from home

Memoriam

In loving memory of my Husband Lloyd Keator who passed away six years ago today November 29, 1969.
This is the day of Remembrance
And one of sad regret
A day I'll always remember
When the rest of the world forgets.
Loving wife,
& Family

Memoriam

In loving memory of Anna Naccarato on her birthday, November 30th.
God took her home, it was His will,
But in our hearts we love her still,
Her memory is as dear today
As in the hour she passed away,
We often sit and think of her
When we are all alone,
For memory is the only friend
That grief can call its own.
Love,
MOTHER & SON

Memoriam

In loving memory of our son, brother and godson, Jansen Raymond DePuy whom God called home on November 30, 1974.
We think of you in silence,
No one sees us weep.
But many a silent tear is shed,
When others are asleep,
Each time we look at your picture,
You seem to smile and say,
"Have courage and trust in God We'll meet again someday."

T-Way Fatal

KINGSTON — An elderly New Jersey woman was killed and her husband was critically injured Friday afternoon when their car left the southbound lane of the New York State Thruway south of Kingston and hit a tree, flipping over down an embankment.

Pronounced dead on arrival at Benedictine Hospital was Marjorie W. Foley, 75, of P.O. Box 450, Rutherford, N.J. State police said she was ejected from the car.

Doctors Ambulance took John H. Foley, 74, to the hospital with head and back injuries reported. He was transferred to Albany Medical Center by ambulance Saturday afternoon where he was still reported to be in serious condition.

Police could not tell why Foley apparently lost control of the vehicle at milepost 85.

In Pine Hill early Saturday morning, a middle aged Brooklyn man was subdued outside the Colonial Bar on Main Street after slashing two men with a hunting knife. In jail on $3,000 bail pending a Dec. 9 hearing is Ladislaus P. O'Connell, 41, charged with second degree assault, a felony. Sustaining minor cuts were Kevin R. O'Connell and Steven Rainis, no address given. Arrested by Ulster County Sheriff's deputies and Shandaken Town Constables, O'Connell was arraigned before Shandaken Justice Edwin France.

State Toll At 13

Motorists returning home from their Thanksgiving holidays in New York State face rain and breezes, but unusually warm weather, the National Weather Service said.

The Weather Service predicted temperatures today would be in the 50s across much of the state.

As the 102-hour holiday weekend stretched toward its midnight today conclusion, holiday traffic deaths climbed Saturday to 13. Ten persons were killed in automobiles and three persons died when hit by a vehicle while crossing streets, police said. The U.S. toll has hit 244.

Police agencies throughout the state issued warnings to motorists to use caution, especially on any wet or snowy highways, as they started their trips home after visiting relatives.

Last year, 42 traffic fatalities were recorded in the state during the Thanksgiving holiday. The record toll for the period is 43, set in 1965 and matched in 1968.

A United Press International count at 9 p.m. EST showed 244 persons had died in traffic since the beginning of the Thanksgiving weekend at 6 p.m. local time Wednesday.

A breakdown of accidental deaths showed:

Traffic	244
Fires	27
Planes	9
Other	17
Total	298

Texas had the highest traffic toll— 17, followed by California and North Carolina with 15. New York and Georgia each had 13 and Ohio and Pennsylvania each had 12.

Isn't it nice, not to have to worry about your Social Security check?

Every month, on the second or third, you would sit at home and wait for the mailman to come with your Social Security check.

Every month you would plan not to be away from home on the second or third. Otherwise, you'd worry.

Then, when your check came, you would hurry to the bank, and stand in line with all the other people whose Social Security checks had arrived safely that day.

Isn't it nice, not to have to go through all that anymore? Your Social Security check is deposited in your account at Rondout Savings Bank by the United States Government!

If you still have not arranged for this to be done . . . what are you waiting and worrying for? Do it now . . . at Rondout Savings!

Memoriam

In loving memory of my Husband Lloyd Keator who passed away six years ago today November 29, 1969.
This is the day of Remembrance
And one of sad regret
A day I'll always remember
When the rest of the world forgets.
Loving wife,
& Family

Memoriam

In loving memory of Anna Naccarato on her birthday, November 30th.
God took her home, it was His will,
But in our hearts we love her still,
Her memory is as dear today
As in the hour she passed away,
We often sit and think of her
When we are all alone,
For memory is the only friend
That grief can call its own.
Love,

T-Way Fatal

KINGSTON

An elderly New Jersey woman was killed and her husband was critically injured Friday afternoon when their car left the southbound lane of the New York State Thruway south of Kingston and hit a tree, flipping over down an embankment.

Pronounced dead on arrival at Benedictine Hospital was Marjorie W. Foley, 75, of P.O. Box 450, Rutherford, N.J. State police said she was ejected from the car.

Doctors Ambulance took John H. Foley, 74, to the hospital with head and back injuries reported. He was transferred to Albany Medical Center by ambulance Saturday afternoon where he was still reported to be in serious condition.

Police could not tell why Foley apparently lost control of the vehicle at milepost 85.

Another hunting accident was reported Saturday in Ulster County, as a veteran Brewster deer hunter unloaded a shell into his thigh. State police at Ellenville reported that Howard Morris, 38, of that Putnam County town was his own victim.

Hunting with two Dutchess County companions on state owned property off Upper Cherrytown Road, Kerhonkson, Morris started loading his gun about 50 yards off the road when it discharged, striking him in the left leg above the knee.

Bleeding profusely, he was transported to Kingston Hospital where he was reported to be in "stable" and satisfactory condition several hours later awating surgery.

In Pine Hill early Saturday morning, a middle aged Brooklyn man was subdued outside the Colonial Bar on Main Street after slashing two men with a hunting knife. In jail on $3,000 bail pending a Dec. 9 hearing is Ladislaus P. O'Connell, 41, charged with second degree assault, a felony. Sustaining minor cuts were Kevin R. O'Connell and Steven Rainis, no address given. Arrested by Ulster County Sheriff's deputies and Shandaken Town Constables, O'Connell was arraigned before Shandaken Justice Edwin France.

State Toll At 13

Motorists returning home from their Thanksgiving holidays in New York State face rain and breezes, but unusually warm weather, the National Weather Service said.

The Weather Service predicted temperatures today would be in the 50s across much of the state.

As the 102-hour holiday weekend stretched toward its midnight today conclusion, holiday traffic deaths climbed Saturday to 13. Ten persons were killed in automobiles and three persons died when hit by a vehicle while crossing streets, police said. The U.S. toll has hit 244.

Police agencies throughout the state issued warnings to motorists to use caution, especially on any wet or snowy highways, as they started their trips home after visiting relatives.

Last year, 42 traffic fatalities were recorded in the state during the Thanksgiving holiday. The record toll for the period is 43, set in 1965 and matched in 1968.

A United Press International count at 9 p.m. EST showed 244 persons had died in traffic since the beginning of the Thanksgiving weekend at 6 p.m. local time Wednesday.

A breakdown of accidental deaths showed:

Traffic	244
Fires	27
Planes	9
Other	17
Total	298

Texas had the highest traffic toll— 17, followed by California and North Carolina with 15. New York and Georgia each had 13 and Ohio and Pennsylvania each had 12.

Isn't it nice, not to have to worry about your Social Security check?

Every month, on the second or third, you would sit at home and wait for the mailman to come with your Social Security check.

Every month you would plan not to be away from home on the second or third. Otherwise, you'd worry.

Then, when your check came, you would hurry to the bank, and stand in line with all the other people whose Social Security checks had arrived safely that day.

Isn't it nice, not to have to go through all that anymore? Your Social Security check is deposited in your account at Rondout Savings Bank by the United States Government!

Court Choice 'Just A Name'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to begin hearings Dec. 8 on Supreme Court nominee John Paul Stevens, but Senate sources said Saturday that confirmation before the preChristmas adjournment is in doubt.

Judiciary Chairman James O. Eastland said "I don't think it'll take long" for the committee to act on the nomination.

In a telephone interview Saturday from his Doddsville, Miss., home, Eastland noted that Stevens "was confirmed once before" when named to the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals by Richard M. Nixon in 1970.

Asked if he would comply with the President's request for speedy action on the appointment, Eastland replied: "That's right I hope we can."

He said he will schedule committee hearings one week after the nomination is formally received, probably Monday. But he said he "couldn't guess" whether the Senate could complete action before the Christmas recess, now scheduled to begin Dec. 19.

Stevens gets high marks from the American Bar Association and other leaders of the legal profession, but is a virtual unknown to most senators who will have to vote on his appointment

It is for this reason, some Senate sources said, that it is impossible to judge the length of the confirmation process. If any opposiion develops either to Stevens or to a quick confirmation, the tightness of the Congressional schedule for the remainder of this session indicates the vote could go over until next year.

The ABA committee which investigated candidates for the court welcomed the appointment and said Stevens "meets high standards of professional competence, judicial temperament and integrity — the committee's highest evaluation."

Warren Christopher, who chaired the ABA panel, said he is "held in the highest regard by a wide spectrum of judges, lawyers and professors to whom the committee talked."

And Attorney General Edward H. Levi called the appointment "a commitment to excellence."

But most members of the Senate contacted Friday and Saturday say they know little or nothing about him. They are awaiting further information before indicating whether opposition may arise

"I don't know anything more about this gentleman than I read in the papers. He's just a name," said Sen. Quentin N. Burdick, D-N.D., a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Burdick, in Fargo, N.D., said he was surprised "in a way" by the choice since Judge Stevens "was not one of the names bandied about by you press people. I suppose everybody was surprised in a way."

"I don't know the gentleman," said Sen. Clifford P. Case, R-N.J. "I'm sure the committee will want to do a thorough job" investigating his qualifications, he said, adding, "I don't know any reason why this isn't a perfectly adequate appointment"

Sen Adlai E Stevenson, Dill., said, "Judge Stevens will make an outstanding justice of the Supreme Court. I applaud his appointment." But an aide said the senator does not know Stevens well and based his remarks on comments from lawyers who do.

The White House, in announcing the appointment Friday, released a list of 11 "representative opinions" written by the judge They indicate Stevens, named to succeed Associate Justice William O. Douglas, is a moderate conservative who may join other recently appointed justices in reversing the liberal legal tide of the Warren Court. It is difficult, if not impossible, however, to predict how a judge will vote before he joins the High Court.

Ford Warmed by Flag-Waving Eskimos

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (UPI) — En route to China, President Ford Saturday assured a cheering, flag-waving crowd of Eskimos, oil workers and military personnel that U.S. peace diplomacy requires "military power second to none."

About 5,000 Alaskans and several brass bands greeted Ford in 8 degree temperatures when he arrived aboard Air Force One at Eielson Air Force Base on the first leg of a 10-day, 24,000 mile trip to Peking, Indonesia, the Philippines and Hawaii.

Parka-clad Eskimos bounced 30 and 40 feet in the air off canvas sheets in a joyous "Eskimo Blanket Toss" as Ford walked across the tarmac, waving. The crowd set up a roar of "Hi, Jerry" and many waved tiny American flags distributed for the occasion.

The President wore a heavy lined raincoat and Betty Ford a mink coat as proof against the Arctic winter temperatures.

Out in the crowd, one group waved a banner reading "Please Save Us From the Pipeline" — a reference to the environmental damage conservationists' fear from the Alaskan oil pipeline which Ford was inspecting during the overnight Alaska stopover.

Enroute to a four-day Peking visit that begins Monday morning EST, Ford set aside a day to visit the Alaskan military bases facing Asia on America's northern frontier and to inspect construction of the Alaskan oil pipeline.

He was accompanied by Mrs. Ford, daughter Susan, 18, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and a team of advisers on a trip that will introduce him as President to the Chinese leadership and expose him personally to their fears that the United States is becoming too friendly with the Soviet Union.

Arriving in Arctic winter temperatures at Eielson AFB, Ford assured his greeting party — and skeptical critics of his China visit back home as well — that his efforts to strengthen American ties with China and the Soviet Union will not weaken its nuclear-era defense posture.

"Let me reassure you today that my administration, while striving to preserve world peace, remains aware that the best insurance for peace is U S. military power second to none," Ford said.

"There will be no slackening in my administration of support for a first-rate Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps and Coast Guard ... Worldwide diplomacy would not be credible without a credible military force, both in substance and perception.

"It is appropriate to stop here enroute to China ...," Ford said. "You know and I know that we must keep the Pacific peaceful."

According to high-level diplomatic assessments of the Peking visit, this message would likely be as well received in China as in the United States

The Chinese have made clear they fear the United States may withdraw completely from Asia in the post-Vietnam war era and leave a power vacuum to be exploited by Peking's arch-enemy, the Soviet Union

Ford struck a softer diplomatic chord earlier at Andrews Air Force Base, where he boarded Air Force One.

There, he pledged his mission would help "consolidate the peace" in Asia and "strengthen our new relationship with the great nation (China) from whom we were isolated, in mutual suspicion, for almost a quarter century"

Uptown Car Wash On Council Agenda

KINGSTON Two requests from the Kingston Urban Renewal Agency (KURA) regarding the proposed sale of an urban renewal parcel behind the North Front Steet parking garage to accommodate a car wash facility highlights the agenda of Tuesday's meeting of the Kingston Common Council

In a communication to the council, the agency requests an amendment to the Uptown Urban Renewal Plan changing the use of Disposition Parcel 6-D to permit the commercial facility At present, the parcel in question is designated for parking purposes

Theproposed change in the Urban Renewal Use Plan already has received KURA and Kingston Planning Board approval Council approval is required to finalize the change

If council approval is obtained Tuesday, the agency will ask the city to set a public hearing date on the sale of the parcel to John H Deegan, who would develop the parcel

In what is an otherwise light agenda, the council is expected to consider a $50,000 claim filed by Washington G.B. Bryan on behalf of himself and his son for injuries reportedly sustained by his son while playing at the Rondout Gardens mini-park.

The city, the Kingston Urban Renewal Agency and Marist College in Poughkeepsie, are named as defendants. Bryan alleges in the suit that an unspecified "device" located at the mini-park was defective, resulting in his son falling from the device and breaking his right wrist. According to information in the claim, Marist College was responsible for installation of the device.

The reported incident occurred Aug. 18. The claim is expected to be referred to Corporation Counsel Aaron E. Klein.

In other matters scheduled for Tuesday's agenda, the council will receive notice from the New York State Department of Transportation that the restricted designation for the Meadow-Murray Street segment of the North-South Arterial will be canceled, because the DOT has officially completed work on the segment.

The council also will be advised by Mayor Francis R. Koenig that he has reappointed Forris Dabney Sr. of 47 South Pine Street to a five year term on the Kingston Housing Authority. Dabney's new term will expire Nov. 29, 1980

The council meets at 7:30 p.m. at City Hall, 1 Meadow Street.

CBS: Reflections in A Bloodshot Eye

'And That's the Way It Is' With Veteran Walter Cronkite

(Editor's Note: This is the sixth in a series of eight articles written by Robert Metz on the subject, CBS: Reflections in a Bloodshot Eye. Today's installment is about The Way It Is With Walter Cronkite.)

NEW YORK

Not long ago, the editorial director of a major publishing company was introduced to a youthful-looking CBS official by Mike Dann at a party at Dann's country home.

The man's name didn't register with the book publisher and he asked: "What do you do at CBS?"

"I reign," the man answered firmly.

"You what?" asked the publisher, in disbelief.

"I reign."

"Right," said the publisher, "and you snow, too, I'll bet."

His little joke was rewarded with a bleak smile from the CBS man.

Testing, the publisher asked, "Could you fire, say, Walter Cronkite?"

"I could, but I wouldn't," the executive answered tersly.

His name — John A. Schneider, president of the CBS Broadcast Group and a vice-president and director of CBS itself (and the man who succeeded Jim Aubrey as television network president in 1965). Maybe he could fire Walter Cronkite, but probably not; though in the unlikely event somebody else decided that Walter had to go — you can be sure that John Schneider would be tough enough to break the news to America's most trusted newscaster.

At the broadcast studios, Walter Cronkite commands a certain deference. During one of his infrequent telecasts from the CBS Washington bureau not long ago, some 150 broadcast journalists including 21 reporters and 8 camera crews clustered nearby as he finished the 7 p.m. news, saying, as he often does, "And that's the way it is . . ." There was small talk within the crowd, but no one detached himself and approached Uncle Walter. No one tried to draw Cronkite into conversation as he relaxed, slumped in a chair, his feet propped on a desk. For Cronkite, the managing editor as well as anchor man of the Evening News, is no ordinary boss. He is a celebrity — and, in contrast to the other stars in the CBS News firmament, a supernova. He is not one to be buttonholed for persiflage.

Being a celebrity has its drawbacks, of course. One is that public figures sometimes attract nuts bent on mayhem. One visitor to Cronkite's office was surprised to see the secretary pull out a key and unlock the door . . .

Fresh from the newspaper world in 1948, Walter Cronkite, age 32, read the news too rapidly and conveyed little depth. Worse yet, he made no discernible impact.

But after a while, the ex-wire-service man surprised his associates. His delivery improved and he bagan to develop style, perspective, poise. (In 1953 You Are There began its dramatic re-creation of historical events, and was narrated by genial Walter Cronkite.) There was something else about him that engendered trust: He was a solid newsman who recognized the distinction between reporting and advocacy. All through his career he would be careful not to cross the line. Walter Cronkite didn't become the nation's most respected broadcast journalist by taking stands. (Cronkite gave his special brand of reporting to the moon landing in 1969, remarking at the moment of boot to dust: "Man on the moon! . . . Man finally standing on the surface of the moon. My golly!")

WALTER CRONKITE
. . . 'Great, Gray Father Image'

Walter's image is one of calm. In fact, he has a quick temper — though it is always under control in front of the cameras. But even if his admirers never experienced it, they were beneficiaries of his rancor in 1968. For what Walter Cronkite saw in Vietnam, after the massive Communist Tet offensive, made him very angry. Angry enough to cross over the line into advocacy journalism. (Later Cronkite hinted that he felt he had been deceived by the government when he reported on the U.S. military buildup in Vietnam in 1965. It appeared to him at that time that the buildup was essentially defensive — nothing more.)

After the Tet offensive, in February 1968, Cronkite went to see for himself. He was appalled and on the scene wrote his account: Report from Vietnam by Walter Cronkite. "These ruins are in Saigon . . ."

Cronkite went on to detail the Vietcong offensive, the complete surprise that the VC were able to achieve in the cities, thus exploding the myth that the Americans had made them secure and were successfully pacifying the countryside.

Cronkite concluded: "It is increasingly clear to this reporter that the only rational way out then will be to negotiate, not as victors, but as an honorable people who lived up to their pledge to defend democracy, and did the best they could."

That shrewd politician, Lyndon B. Johnson, used to say that when he wanted to reach the "good folks" in Dubuque, Denver and Dallas, he would call in CBS's Eric Sevareid and have a chat with him. Johnson believed the "good folks" watched Cronkite and would get the message from commentator-philosopher Sevareid who held down the "heavy" spot on the Cronkite eveing news broadcasts.

"His feeling over the years," says Johnson's press secretary, Bill Moyers, "was that CBS was the country's medium — much more than NBC. This may have been partly becase of his history with CBS Johnson's own station in Texas was a CBS affiliate, but that's the way he saw it."

Moyers says Johnson told him that Cronkite's broadcast after the Tet offensive, charging deception in Washington, had caused the President to lose credibility in the eyes of American people, due to the "tremendous prestige" Walter Cronkite had throughout the country.

Moyers further believes that if Cronkite had become alarmed and outspoken about the United States buildup in Vietnam during his visit there in 1965, Johnson could never have gotten away with the troop commitments that escalated the war in the first place. Moyers alluded to a poll that found 70 per cent of the American people trusted Cronkite more than anyone else in the public eye: "We always knew before this poll was taken that Cronkite had more authority with the American peoole than anyone else. It was Johnson's instinct that Cronkite was it."

It is little wonder that both political parties have approached Cronkite at one time or another to run for office. The nation's great gray father image, at least for a long period in the late '60s and early '70s, would seem to have been Walter Cronkite.

Cronkite, 59 years old in 1975, is in vigorous health. The network did have a scare a while back when a tumor was discovered in his throat. It was removed and proved to be benign, but the voice that millions wait to hear nightly was seriously affected for many weeks. Fully recovered now, Cronkite leads the life of a man at the top of his profession, private and almost patrician. He has a passion for sailing and mans his own 35-foot ketch whenever he can away.

Anchor men for the most part have their material written for them, and CBS staff writers do relatively little leg work in preparing the stories Cronkite reads on the air. Instead, they rely heavily on stories picked up from the press and rewrite items from the newspapers. While Cronkite regularly goes over the copy and gives it the Cronkite touch, his writers have already put it more or less in his style. As a result, Cronkite is able to spend the day doing background interviews over lunch and "being a superstar" as a CBS colleague puts it enviously.

Cronkite usually arrives at the New York studio (a converted dairy on Manhattan's West Side where CBS New's operations are independently based) late in the afternoon, though he often tells associates he intends to arrive in the morning and be managing editor of the Evening News in fact, not just title. The executive producer of the Evening News, currently Burton Benjamin, is the working executive. He decides how much time each correspondent's story is worth and whether it will appear on the tube at all. Cronkite has the right to change things if he wants to. But mostly Cronkite is preoccupied with his own portion of the broadcast. He jealously guards his 6 minutes of "tell" out of the 23 total minutes of news.

The big incentive to be Evening News anchor man is the satisfaction that goes with superstardom and the money. Cronkite gets an estimated $300,000 a year (both Roger Mudd and Dan Rather — currently "rated" in that order as the number one and two candidates to be Cronkite's eventual successor — are supposedly paid around $100,000, plus outside income).

Cronkite, meanwhile, reigns securely and, from all accounts, serenely, with a cumulative appeal as pervasive as his delivery is mild. And that's the way it is.

CBS: Reflections in A Bloodshot Eye

'And That's the Way It Is' With Veteran Walter Cronkite

(Editor's Note: This is the sixth in a series of eight articles written by Robert Metz on the subject, CBS: Reflections in a Bloodshot Eye. Today's installment is about The Way It Is With Walter Cronkite.)

NEW YORK

Not long ago, the editorial director of a major publishing company was introduced to a youthful-looking CBS official by Mike Dann at a party at Dann's country home.

The man's name didn't register with the book publisher and he asked: "What do you do at CBS?"

"I reign," the man answered firmly.

"You what?" asked the publisher, in disbelief.

"I reign."

"Right," said the publisher, "and you snow, too, I'll bet."

His little joke was rewarded with a bleak smile from the CBS man.

Testing, the publisher asked, "Could you fire, say, Walter Cronkite?"

"I could, but I wouldn't," the executive answered tersly.

His name — John A. Schneider, president of the CBS Broadcast Group and a vice-president and director of CBS itself (and the man who succeeded Jim Aubrey as television network president in 1965). Maybe he could fire Walter Cronkite, but probably not; though in the unlikely event somebody else decided that Walter had to go — you can be sure that John Schneider would be tough enough to break the news to America's most trusted newscaster.

At the broadcast studios, Walter Cronkite commands a certain deference. During one of his infrequent telecasts from the CBS Washington bureau not long ago, some 150 broadcast journalists including 21 reporters and 8 camera crews clustered nearby as he finished the 7 p.m. news, saying, as he often does, "And that's the way it is . . ." There was small talk within the crowd, but no one detached himself and approached Uncle Walter. No one tried to draw Cronkite into conversation as he relaxed, slumped in a chair, his feet propped on a desk. For Cronkite, the managing editor as well as anchor man of the Evening News, is no ordinary boss. He is a celebrity — and, in contrast to the other stars in the CBS News firmament, a supernova. He is not one to be buttonholed for persiflage.

Being a celebrity has its drawbacks, of course. One is that public figures sometimes attract nuts bent on mayhem. One visitor to Cronkite's office was surprised to see the secretary pull out a key and unlock the door . . .

Fresh from the newspaper world in 1948, Walter Cronkite, age 32, read the news too rapidly and conveyed little depth. Worse yet, he made no discernible impact. But after a while, the ex-wire-service man surprised his associates. His delivery improved and he bagan to develop style, perspective, poise. (In 1953 You Are There began its dramatic re-creation of historical events, and was narrated by genial Walter Cronkite.) There was something else about him that engendered trust: He was a solid newsman who recognized the distinction between reporting and advocacy. All through his career he would be careful not to cross the line. Walter Cronkite didn't become the nation's most respected broadcast journalist by taking stands. (Cronkite gave his special brand of reporting to the moon landing in 1969, remarking at the moment of boot to dust: "Man on the moon! . . . Man finally standing on the surface of the moon. My golly!")

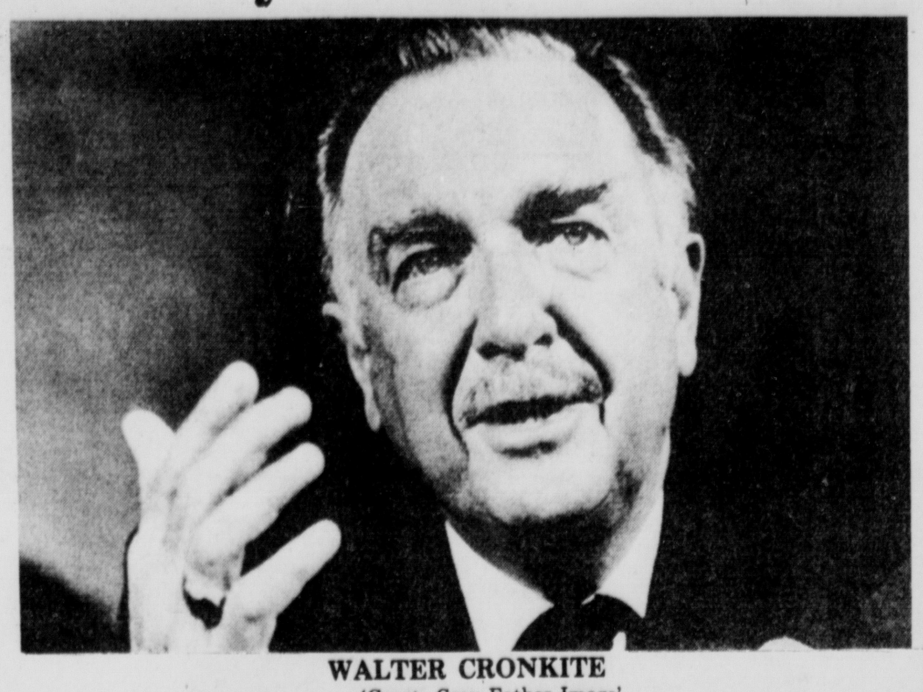

Walter's image is one of calm. In fact, he has a quick temper — though it is always under control in front of the cameras. But even if his admirers never experienced it. they were beneficiaries of his rancor in 1968. For what Walter Cronkite saw in Vietnam, after the massive Communist Tet offensive, made him very angry. Angry enough to cross over the line into advocacy journalism. (Later Cronkite hinted that he felt he had been deceived by the government when he reported on the U.S. military buildup in Vietnam in 1965. It appeared to him at that time that the buildup was essentially defensive — nothing more.)

After the Tet offensive, in February 1968, Cronkite went to see for himself. He was appalled and on the scene wrote his account: Report from Vietnam by Walter Cronkite. "These ruins are in Saigon . . ."

Cronkite went on to detail the Vietcong offensive, the complete surprise that the VC were able to achieve in the cities, thus exploding the myth that the Americans had made them secure and were successfully pacifying the countryside.

Cronkite concluded: "It is increasingly clear to this reporter that the only rational way out then will be to negotiate, not as victors, but as an honorable people who lived up to their pledge to defend democracy, and did the best they could."

That shrewd politician, Lyndon B. Johnson, used to say that when he wanted to reach the "good folks" in Dubuque, Denver and Dallas, he would call in CBS's Eric Sevareid and have a chat with him. Johnson believed the "good folks" watched Cronkite and would get the message from commentator-philosopher Sevareid who held down the "heavy" spot on the Cronkite eveing news broadcasts.

WALTER CRONKITE
. . . 'Great, Gray Father Image'

"His feeling over the years," says Johnson's press secretary, Bill Moyers, "was that CBS was the country's medium — much more than NBC. This may have been partly becase of his history with CBS Johnson's own station in Texas was a CBS affiliate, but that's the way he saw it."

Moyers says Johnson told him that Cronkite's broadcast after the Tet offensive, charging deception in Washington, had caused the President to lose credibility in the eyes of American people, due to the "tremendous prestige" Walter Cronkite had throughout the country.

Moyers further believes that if Cronkite had become alarmed and outspoken about the United States buildup in Vietnam during his visit there in 1965, Johnson could never have gotten away with the troop commitments that escalated the war in the first place. Going Back to the Time Mayor Walker Resigned His Post

City Beat

By Hugh Reynolds

City Hall Reporter

THE GOOD OLD DAYS — Since statistics indicate that this town's population is definitely on the mature side—upwards of 6,000 persons are at least 60 years old—it behooves us to occasionally go back a few years, further back than even Elvis, further back than even Glen Miller, back to you guessed it, the time Mayor Walker quit.

You may ask why we settled on the time Mayor Harry Walker quit. Well, there are a number of reasons.

We got involved with the late Mayor Walker when we got involved in writing stories about Frank Koenig's last election, stories which dealt with whether the incumbent was the holder of the all-time consecutive election record. We thought he was and we wrote it several times during the election . . . as in if Koenig gets reelected it will be four in a row which will be unprecedented . . . but once the smoke cleared it became clear that Frank, rather than being a record holder, was merely a co-holder along with Mayor Canfield.

Along the same lines, we came to do some research on whether Bobby Gallo's five straight was a record. And that's where we ran into Harry Walker, the Mayor who served for ten days.

We must admit that an anonymous letter signed "yours for truth in journalism, another old-timer," piqued our curiosity even more.

This anonymous old-timer, who for the purpose of brevity, shall hereafter by referred to as "OT," wrote us to correct "a long standing error" that Walker resigned because of "ill health."

"OT" sounds like a nice fellow; he appreciates our shortcomings. "I know that you as a Johnny-come-lately wouldn't know the details," he writes, "but it is time you and the Freeman were straightened."

He then goes on the give us the "details" on what has to be one of the more facinating stories in the political history of this town.

"OT" has some problems with facts and figures, but after all, it's been 40-odd years. He's got Joe Epstein losing the alderman-at-large race to Connie Heiselman in 1933 by 12 votes when in fact Connie beat Sam Mann by more than a thousand that year. He beat Sam by 11 in 1931, however, and bested Joe by a fairly good margin in '37.

"Ot's" position here in '75 is basically that of the Democrats of '34, that Walker resigned not because of ill health but because he wasn't eligible to hold the office, the reason being that according to the Democrats, Walker wasn't a property owner in the city at the time of his election. In those days you had to own land to hold appointed or elected office.

Republicans, of course, then and now take the official view that Walker was duly elected (that he was a property owner) and that he did in fact resign due to ill health.

Here's a few "facts" we dug up on that story; we qualify "facts" because it was a long time ago and memories aren't all that good. The records are just bare bones, not much meat.

Walker, it seems, became "ill" right after election, realizing rather quickly that he had bitten off more than he could chew. A small town pharmacist, Walker was ill-equipped to handle the political pressure of a new administration intensified by the fact that more than 2,000 people were out of work in Kingston.

His contemporaries tell us that Walker started to crack around the end of November, 1933—his letter of resignation traces his "illness" to Dec. 1 of that year.

A two week vacation in the Catskills had him back to health for his Mayor's Message on Jan. 1 but he soon succumned to the pressures of the office. On Jan. 10 he resigned due to illness.

In terms of the controversy surrounding Walker's resignation, two other dates—Jan 1 and Jan 11— are just as significant.

On Jan. 1 Walker delivered his annyal message. He also sent a communication to the Common Council regarding one Alderman Burger of the 10th Ward. The mayor said the alderman had not been legally elected. The reason? The alderman wasn't a property owner.

The Laws and Rules Committee met later in the week (as did the entire Council) and agreed with the mayor So did the entire Council, by an 11-1 vote, with Epstein voting against.

The unseating of Burger forms the basis for the Walker property-owning controversy Republicans, arguing politically say that Walker would not have blown the whistle on an alderman when he knew he was guilty of the same thing.

Democrats, including our friend "OT" take a more cynical view of the whole thing They allege that Walker was merely a pawn in a game being played by Heiselman.

Connie, they argue, knew that neither Burger nor Walker were propety owners. If Walker accused Burger, Walker was gone and as "OT" puts it, Connie "became instant mayor."

Facts brought out in November of 1975, prove them wrong, but we're getting ahead of ourselves.

Jan 11 the Council got together to accept Walker's resignation and to elect a successor to Heiselman who by charter had been elevated to mayor.

John Schwenk was the chosen one to reign as alderman-at-large but not before some more fireworks

Ex-Mayor Eugene Carey (his term had run out Dec. 31) showed up and announced that since Walker wasn't a property owner, he hadn't been eligible to run for the office of mayor and since he wasn't eligible there hadn't been any election and since there hadn't been any election then he Gene Carey was still mayor since no one had been elected to succeed him.

In fact, Carey went to city hall on Jan. 12 but Connie got there first and wouldn't open the door to the mayor's office. For awhile, the town had "two mayors."

Eventually, as usually happens in Kingston, the thing kind of took care of itself. Democrats grouced for awhile but weren't able to prove anything

Obviously, the afore-mentioned will not settle the controversy of why Walker resigned

Maybe this will. We checked the records at the county office building Book 566, Deed Libre 123 lists Harry Walker as the owner of a 50 by 145 lot on Farrelly Street. It was purchased July 20, 1933

Did somebody put it in after the fact? Did somebody fudge it? Who Knows

One thing's for sure, no political yarn spinner ever lests the facts get in the way of a good story And the Walker resignation is (was?) one of the best

Fit Penalty to Crime For Convicted Youths

NEW YORK (UPI) — A prestigious group of judges and lawyers, noting the national outrage over the leniency often afforded youths convicted of violent crimes, Saturday recommended changes in the system that would fit the penalty to the crime.

"The severity of sanctions for juvenile offenders should be based on the seriousness of the offense committed rather than a court's view of the 'needs' of the juvenile," the Juvenile Justice Standards Project said

It said state legislatures should fix the maximum sentences and abolish the practice of indeterminate sentencing now prevalent in most states.

Indeterminate sentencing permits widely differing punishment for the same crime and "creates a potential for abuse that is all too often realized in practice," the group said

The panel also said juvenile court proceedings should no longer be closed to the public.

"Visibility and accountability of decision making should replace closed proceedings and unrestrained official discretion," the group suggested

The Juvenile Justice Standards Project is sponsored jointly by the Institute of Judicial Administration at New York University and the American Bar Association The report by its 30 judges, lawyers, psychologists, sociologists and social workers was made public by it chairman, Irving R Kaufman, the Chief Judge of the 2nd Circuit U S Appeals Court

Going Back to the Time Mayor Walker Resigned His Post

City Beat

By Hugh Reynolds

City Hall Reporter

THE GOOD OLD DAYS — Since statistics indicate that this town's population is definitely on the mature side—upwards of 6,000 persons are at least 60 years old—it behooves us to occasionally go back a few years, further back than even Elvis, further back than even Glen Miller, back to you guessed it, the time Mayor Walker quit.

You may ask why we settled on the time Mayor Harry Walker quit. Well, there are a number of reasons.

We got involved with the late Mayor Walker when we got involved in writing stories about Frank Koenig's last election, stories which dealt with whether the incumbent was the holder of the all-time consecutive election record. We thought he was and we wrote it several times during the election . . . as in if Koenig gets reelected it will be four in a row which will be unprecedented . . . but once the smoke cleared it became clear that Frank, rather than being a record holder, was merely a co-holder along with Mayor Canfield.

Along the same lines, we came to do some research on whether Bobby Gallo's five straight was a record. And that's where we ran into Harry Walker, the Mayor who served for ten days.

We must admit that an anonymous letter signed "yours for truth in journalism, another old-timer," piqued our curiosity even more.

This anonymous old-timer, who for the purpose of brevity, shall hereafter by referred to as "OT," wrote us to correct "a long standing error" that Walker resigned because of "ill health."

"OT" sounds like a nice fellow; he appreciates our shortcomings. "I know that you as a Johnny-come-lately wouldn't know the details," he writes, "but it is time you and the Freeman were straightened."

He then goes on the give us the "details" on what has to be one of the more facinating stories in the political history of this town.

"OT" has some problems with facts and figures, but after all, it's been 40-odd years. He's got Joe Epstein losing the alderman-at-large race to Connie Heiselman in 1933 by 12 votes when in fact Connie beat Sam Mann by more than a thousand that year. He beat Sam by 11 in 1931, however, and bested Joe by a fairly good margin in '37.

"Ot's" position here in '75 is basically that of the Democrats of '34, that Walker resigned not because of ill health but because he wasn't eligible to hold the office, the reason being that according to the Democrats, Walker wasn't a property owner in the city at the time of his election. In those days you had to own land to hold appointed or elected office.

Republicans, of course, then and now take the official view that Walker was duly elected (that he was a property owner) and that he did in fact resign due to ill health.

Here's a few "facts" we dug up on that story; we qualify "facts" because it was a long time ago and memories aren't all that good. The records are just bare bones, not much meat.

Walker, it seems, became "ill" right after election, realizing rather quickly that he had bitten off more than he could chew. A small town pharmacist, Walker was ill-equipped to handle the political pressure of a new administration intensified by the fact that more than 2,000 people were out of work in Kingston.

His contemporaries tell us that Walker started to crack around the end of November, 1933—his letter of resignation traces his "illness" to Dec. 1 of that year.

A two week vacation in the Catskills had him back to health for his Mayor's Message on Jan. 1 but he soon succumned to the pressures of the office. On Jan. 10 he resigned due to illness.

In terms of the controversy surrounding Walker's resignation, two other dates—Jan. 1 and Jan. 11— are just as significant.

On Jan. 1 Walker delivered his annyal message. He also sent a communication to the Common Council regarding one Alderman Burger of the 10th Ward. The mayor said the alderman had not been legally elected. The reason? The alderman wasn't a property owner.

The Laws and Rules Committee met later in the week (as did the entire Council) and agreed with the mayor. So did the entire Council, by an 11-1 vote, with Epstein voting against.

The unseating of Burger forms the basis for the Walker property-owning controversy. Republicans, arguing politically say that Walker would not have blown the whistle on an alderman when he knew he was guilty of the same thing.

Democrats, including our friend "OT" take a more cynical view of the whole thing. They allege that Walker was merely a pawn in a game being played by Heiselman.

Connie, they argue, knew that neither Burger nor Walker were propety owners. If Walker accused Burger, Walker was gone and as "OT" puts it, Connie "became instant mayor."

Facts brought out in November of 1975, prove them wrong, but we're getting ahead of ourselves.

Jan. 11 the Council got together to accept Walker's resignation and to elect a successor to Heiselman who by charter had been elevated to mayor.

John Schwenk was the chosen one to reign as alderman-at-large but not before some more fireworks.

Ex-Mayor Eugene Carey (his term had run out Dec. 31) showed up and announced that since Walker wasn't a property owner, he hadn't been eligible to run for the office of mayor and since he wasn't eligible there hadn't been any election and since there hadn't been any election then he Gene Carey was still mayor since no one had been elected to succeed him.

In fact, Carey went to city hall on Jan. 12 but Connie got there first and wouldn't open the door to the mayor's office. For awhile, the town had "two mayors."

Eventually, as usually happens in Kingston, the thing kind of took care of itself. Democrats grouced for awhile but weren't able to prove anything.

Obviously, the afore-mentioned will not settle the controversy of why Walker resigned.

Maybe this will. We checked the records at the county office building. Book 566, Deed Libre 123 lists Harry Walker as the owner of a 50 by 145 lot on Farrelly Street. It was purchased July 20, 1933.

Did somebody put it in after the fact? Did somebody fudge it? Who Knows.

One thing's for sure, no political yarn spinner ever lests the facts get in the way of a good story. And the Walker resignation is (was?) one of the best.

Fit Penalty to Crime For Convicted Youths

NEW YORK (UPI) — A prestigious group of judges and lawyers, noting the national outrage over the leniency often afforded youths convicted of violent crimes, Saturday recommended changes in the system that would fit the penalty to the crime.

"The severity of sanctions for juvenile offenders should be based on the seriousness of the offense committed rather than a court's view of the 'needs' of the juvenile," the Juvenile Justice Standards Project said.

It said state legislatures should fix the maximum sentences and abolish the practice of indeterminate sentencing now prevalent in most states.

Indeterminate sentencing permits widely differing punishment for the same crime and "creates a potential for abuse that is all too often realized in practice," the group said.

The panel also said juvenile court proceedings should no longer be closed to the public.

"Visibility and accountability of decision making should replace closed proceedings and unrestrained official discretion," the group suggested.

The Juvenile Justice Standards Project is sponsored jointly by the Institute of Judicial Administration at New York University and the American Bar Association. The report by its 30 judges, lawyers, psychologists, sociologists and social workers was made public by it chairman, Irving R. Kaufman, the Chief Judge of the 2nd Circuit U.S. Appeals Court.

Teenage Drinking

Now that reports of drug use among young persons are supposedly decreasing, the public in general and parents in particular seem complacent over the fact that young persons in increasingly large numbers are turning to alcohol.

Some parents, in fact, are relieved over the turn of events.

However, a recent survey pointed out that alcohol use among young persons is increasing in New York State.

In grades 9-12, 65 per cent of the students reported they had been drunk at least once in the previous year, 50 per cent of those said they were drunk at least once a month, and half that many said they were drunk at least once a week. In addition, 18 per cent said they had been drunk in school at least once during the year.

Two problems of drinking by young people under 18 are cited by those who work with youth. First, since they are too young to drink legally, they are unable to take part in social situations surrounding drinking, unlike older drinkers. Thus instead of drinking to relax or be sociable, most young persons drink for the express purpose of becoming drunk.

Second, young drinkers generally are unaware of the effects of alcohol upoon them. Therefore, they drink too much and are intoxicated before they realize it.

Various approaches to the problem have been proposed. By raising the legal age for obtaining liquor from 18 to 21, the reasoning is that high-school-aged young people will be unable to buy liquor and thus will be unable to supply their younger peers.

The most serious need seems to be for education on the responsibilities of alcohol use. Young drinkers have a glaring lack of knowledge about the drug alcohol and its effects on the human body.

The Freeman recommends that since youthful drinking is starting at the pre-teen level, then the education process should begin in the elementary schools and continue through high school.

In a society that accepts moderate alcohol use, encourages drinking through advertising and in some cases glorifies the consumption of large quantities of liquor, young persons need more knowledge about the effects of alcohol and some guidelines on responsible use.

Lifeline for Humanity

During the holiday season we count our blessings and send forth greetings of joy to those dear to us. Traditionally, too, at holiday time our thoughts reach out to the wider circle of humanity. Our compassion for those less fortunate than ourselves is a key symbol of our deepest, finest human qualities.

Around the world the daily lot of millions of men, women and children is hunger, disease, despair. On their own they struggle vainly to break the vicious cycle of poverty. But, through CARE, you can extend a lifeline for humanity, for these poorest of the poor in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East.

The Freeman urges support of the CARE Crusade which will help 27 million people this coming year, mostly children. At pre-school health centers and schools, regular feedings will combat malnutrition, enabling children to grow into productive adults.

To extend this aid CARE requires $8 million in individual donations. Make Christmas a little brighter for those less fortunate than ourselves.

Bury the Hatchet

Editor, The Freeman:

I have been involved with volunteer fire service for 15 years and was utterly disgusted to read about the alleged attack on one volunteer member by two paid firemen at the Children's Library fire.

This service, whether it be paid or volunteer, is a business not a social function. It is called upon to save lives and property, not try to eliminate one or another.

I feel that this alleged attack should be thoroughly investigated and true results be published since all salaries, and equipment are paid for by taxpayers' monies. I do have the feeling that this, like everything else in Kingston, will be swept under the carpet and silenced.

I, for one, have lost a lot of respect for the paid department. Brother Firemen — that they would stoop so low. I'm also sure that they have lost respect from volunteer companies not only in the city but county-wide as well.

I wish to recall the fire at L and M Junkyard. Cordts, Union and Wicks all responded and took positions and commenced fighting the fire at hand. Along came the paid department with three men on a truck. I think the hatchet should be buried and both departments work as one.

Sincerely,
VERNON J. LEWIS

Be Practical

Editor, The Freeman:

OPEN LETTER to the
President of the
Ulster County S.P.C.A.

Mrs. Russell:

Months ago I talked with you regarding the SPCA. You advised me regarding the deficit, the budget, transfer of stocks and funds from one bank to other financial institutions, etc.

I questioned if it was proper to hire at a large salary someone serving on the Board. You told me it was. It was my understanding that the fund-raiser was to put the SPCA in better financial condition. High figures were mentioned as to the amount to be raised by him in a year.

However, we are now told we must create an IMAGE — a new Shelter, acquire property, raise $150,000.

Knowledgable gentlemen spoke at the last meeting to deaf ears. It is clear the Board wants to hear only what it wants to hear. Publicity in The Freeman with reference to a fund-raiser for the Shelter, announcement of a $150,000 Building Fund Drive is what is causing the members and public to be disturbed — to ask "What is going on at the Shelter?".

The present spay program (to avoid extra work) is now on a "cash and carry" plan. Once it was a most successful program with full cooperation of the veterinaries. There was often sufficient money to allow the spaying, on speculation, of selected Shelter animals, assuring them a better chance of adoption.

Families who could adopt an animal by the old method perhaps cannot pay the full amount, fewer animals are adopted and that could account for the very high euthanasia rate.

While people agonize over the plight of the animals, they reason this is not the time to tackle the massive job of a new Shelter. They would be more apt to cooperate if the present facilities were repaired and operated on as practical a basis as possible until economic conditions improve.

Written in all sincerity . . .
BETH A. ROWE,
Hurley

A Strong Run

Editor, The Freeman:

I like the fact you are running letters on the editorial page, so here's one from me.

Speaking about elections according to the Weekly People, the Socialist Labor Party paper, in Cleveland Ohio the SLP candidate for Mayor, Joseph Pirincin, received 1,721 votes in the non-partisan primary election held September 30.

Pirincin was the top vote getter among minority party candidates, out-polling even one of the Democratic candidates, an ex-Wallaceeite.

Four other major party candidates divided 112,000 votes among them. More than half of the registered voters refrained from voting.

Anyway, the Socialist Labor Party ran an active campaign in Cleveland.

It is encouraging that a majority of the politically discontented voters signified their support for the clear-cut revolutionary act of taking over the means of production and running them through a worker-controlled industrial union administration—the Socialist Labor Party program.

I had the pleasure of attending the annual Thanksgiving Banquet in Manhattan held on Nov. 22 for the Weekly People where over $6 thousand was raised to keep the paper going by the friends and members of the SLP!

British Dissent

By William F. Buckley, Jr.

Mr. Ivor Richard, Q.C., is nowadays the toast of the pusillanimous set, within the State Department and outside it, for his oh-so-wordly denunciation of the recent activity of his American counterpart in the United Nations, Daniel Patrick Moynihan. Mr. Richard is the ambassador from Great Britain, and he is lecturing us now on how to behave in the U.N., his special credentials being England's foreign policy during the century which bred two wars, the Versailles Peace Treaty, and approximately as many dictatorships as there were former British colonies—with the exception of Rhodesia, which Mr. Richard's superiors regularly denounce in accents that would embarrass even Mr. Moynihan.

What is it that upsets Mr. Richard? Well, it is the zeal with which Mr. Moynihan has lately denounced the policies of Colonel Amin, and the Zionist Resolution of the General Assembly. Don't you understand, Mr. Richard said in his speech to the board of directors of the United Nations Association of the U.S.A., that in fact the vaunted Arab-African majority is actually "breaking down"? That is the good news, but five minutes later Mr. Richard asked his listeners to "remember" that the new and weak countries feel "a desire for unity" because—Presumably like the Arab countries—they are so poor and weak.

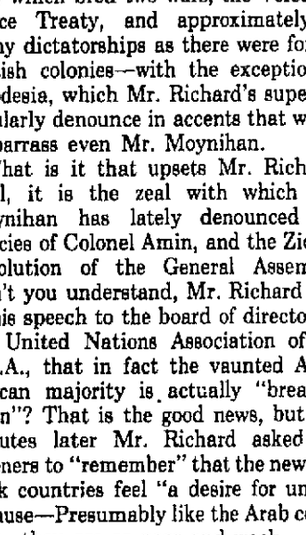

What really causes Mr. Richard to despair—so much so that he quotes King Lear, and invokes the memory of Savonarola—is Mr. Moynihan's reaction to the U.N. vote on "purely ideological and emotional issues." He wouldn't catch Ivor Richard doing any such thing. "I do not see it (the U.N.) as a forum in which to argue my own particular brand of political theology." "Certainly," he went on, it is not geared as a "confrontational arena in which to 'take on' those countries whose po'itical systems and ideology are different irom mine . . . whatever else the place is, it is not the O.K. Corral and I am hardly Wyatt Earp."

I do not think that anyone would confuse Ivor Richard, Q.C., for Wyatt Earp. But I do think English ambassadors to the United Nations should thumb through the charter and the conventions of that body before coming to New York, though to be sure to read about the ideals of the United Nations is not the best preparation for tolerating it.

You see, the point of Mr. Moynihan's recent statements isn't that all countries should embrace any particular brand of political theology. If Mr. Ivor Richard were to stand up in the General Assembly and demand that everyone in the room sing "God Save the Queen," he would make himself even more absurd than he has now done. But Mr. Moynihan is not asking the U.N. to accept the hegemony of American ideals. He is asking the U.N. to accept the U.N.'s ideals.

Mr. Richard made great sport of our alleged failure at the U.N. to abide by the vote of the majority, and of our criticisms of the U.N. as an institution—"you surely do not attack Parliament itself." But Moynihan is precisely defending the institution against the brazen corruption of it by the incumbent delegates. There must be as many anti-racist manifestos in the United Nations as there are Saints' days in Costa Rica. Along comes a character from Uganda who practices racism with systematic zeal, and begins to attack other nations, including our own. And a few weeks later, by a substantial majority, the General Assembly prounounces Zionism to be a form of racism, an equation even the languid Mr. Richard knows not to be the case. Suppose the General Assembly had ordained that the square root of 25 is three: would Mr. Richard have been as tolerant?

As condescending? Because that, really, is what he is being. Moynihan is taking the United Nations seriously. That is to say, he is attaching importance to its pronouncements and activities. Only by doing so can he invest it with a sense of responsibility. Mr. Richard comes from that long line of English diplomatic wiseman who considered Hitler as "purely an ideological and emotional issue." He should realize that the United States in these days is doing the lion's share of the work in keeping the Hitlers of this world at bay, and that under the circumstances, we, uniquely, must from time to time, roar like a lion; and when we do, which is not very often, Poor Richard ought to write that down in his almanac, instead of sticking out his tongue at the teacher.

Washington Merry-Go-Round

Law and Order Score Card

WASHINGTON—During the Nixon years, law and order were honored more in the preachment than the practice.

The term was introduced to politics by Richard Kleindienst, who suffested "law and order" as a campaign cry for Barry Goldwater in 1964. John Mitchell picked it up in 1968 and made it the main theme of Richard Nixon's campaign. Spiro Agnew gave loud voice to "law and order" on the campaign trail.

As their reward, Agnew, Mitchell and Kleindienst became the chief promotors of law and order in the Nixon Administration. They joined in January, 1972, in proclaiming a major new antiicrime program. They vowed, at a cost of $160 million, to reduce crime in eight targeted cities by five per cent in two years and up to 20 per cent in five years.

The three law-and-order stalwarts later stumbled over the law themselves and wound up in varying degrees of jeopardy before the courts. Their aniti-crime program, sadly didn't fare much better.

The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) insists it is too early to assess the impact of the program upon crime. The agency's own crime figures, upon which the program was based are still unavailable.

But the FBI's crime statistice have become the official yardstick of just how much evil lurks in the hearts of men. These figures, which are accepted as scripture by lawmen everywhere, show that total crime in the eight targeted cities did not drop five per cent but shot up more than 43 per cent during the two-year, 1972-74 period.

In all fairness, the $160 million was disbursed with the particular intent of reducing homicide, rape, robbery and aggravated assault. In these categories, the eight cities did better, with an average increase of only 10.2 per cent. Two of the cities, Dallas and Newark, actually showed small declines in these more grievous crimes.

From LEAA's confidential files, we have leaned how some of the $160 million was spent. It might be enlightening to compare the expenditures with the crime figures:

— In Atlanta, a full $1.5 million was spent to purchse helicopters to increase police "visibility." Another $72,750 went "to modify existing field report forms," and $28,246 was used to hire an administrative assistant for the police chief. None of this kept the crime rate from soaring 46.4 per cent.

— In Baltimore, $442,845 was awarded to hire civilians for deskwork and, thereby, to free policemen to fight crime. Another $420,777 was invested in a helicopter patrol and $204,000 was spent for guards, TV monitors and intercoms to keep an eye and ear on public housing projects. Crime in Baltimore nerertheless, hot up an alrming 49.6 per cent.

— The city of Cleveland wangled $100,000 from LEAA for publicity. This didn't deter crime, which rose 26.7 per cent.

— Dallas spent $45,102 on a disbanded program to tie 50 sensory burglar alarms to a helicopter response system. Total crime, up 81.9 per cent, reached greater heights than the helicopters.

— Denver Spent $522,000 of its federal allotment for street lighting, but the extra light didn't seem to hinder the criminals. The crime rate was up 22.5 per cent.

— Newark also tried to shine more light on crime, with a $107,200 expendiure on street lights. An internal report also criticizes the city for failing to complete its "evaluations." The Newark crime rate has moved up 4.7 per cent.

— Portland, Ore., was granted $5,471,581 for adult corrections projects. Yet as of Sept. 30, 1974, according to a report buried in the files, "only $15,340 or .3 per cent of the total—had been expended." The city spent another $173,000 for street lighting. The crime rate, nevertheless, skyrocketed 57.5 per cent.

— The same report charges that St. Louis rushed ahead with projects "until the budget was exhausted, independent of any community input, coordinated master plan or baseline data." The crime rate, accordingly, zoomed 55.9 per cent.

Footnote: An official spokesman explained to our associate, Bob Owens, that the money was supposed to provide "more bang for the buck." The spokesman insisted that there had been "individual project successes" and a "number of instances" of reduced crime goals.

AGNEW MUZZLED: In an earlier column, we reported the backstage events that forced Spiro Agnew out of the vice presidency and lost him the chance to become President.

According to sources close to him, Agnew feels he was euchred out of office by former President Richard Nixon and is eager to tell the story.

However, the former Vice President is "muzzled," said a friend, for another four years. Because criminal charges still hang over Agnew's head, he won't be free to publish his book until the statute of limitations runs out.

Meanwhile his attorney and erstwhile Nixon intimate, Charles Colson, has written a book, which discusses Agnew's downfall. We have had access to the page proofs.

As Vice President, Agnew sought to be impeached by Congress rather than indicted by a grand jury. Colson claims that President Nixon worked behind the scenes on Capitol Hill to undermine Agnew. "White House lobbyists," wrote Colson, "had cut the ground out from under their own Vice President."

The World's Greatest Assassin

WASHINGTON (KFS) — I asked Hugh McDonald how we were supposed to know he wasn't just loonied out. Tne press release on his book about JFK's murder said he was Chief of Detectives in the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department when he retired, that he'd been a part-time spook for the CIA for 20 years, that he'd written three textbooks used in police academies, but even if it is true, he could still be loonied out.

According to his bio, McDonald has been a cop or a spook for 33 of his last 62 years, an experience that ought to cause irreversible damage to anybody's cerebral cortex. Moreover, who's he got to vouch for his sanity? Other cops. He doesn't look like a nutcake, or at least he doesn't look like what we used to think nutcakes look like. The hair is short, the suit is pressed, the shoes are shined, the socks are white and the general manner is one of an amiable, college-educated flatfoot. The only trouble is he says he's had high tea in London with the man who murdered John Kennedy and the guy's name wasn't Lee Harvey Oswald.

REPUTATION ON THE LINE

"I can go to any city in the free world, call the chief of police and he'll send his car. I'm not about to sacrifice my reputation on a harebrain thing," he says. Who knows? It turns out the biggest harebrain thing that's cost one Chief Justice of the United States and countless lawyers their reputations is the Warren Commission Report.

These days we've learned the more proper the credentials, the more imposing the title, the more responsible the story, the better the chance the guy's lying. The most compelling part of McDonald's story is that it's so fantastic.

Briefly, he says that one day he was in the office of his CIA "mentor," a certain Herman Kimsey, now deceased, when a third man came in the room, kicking up a fuss about something or other. When the man left, this Mr. Kimsey told McDonald the chap in question was the world's best assassin.

Sometime later, after the murder, McDonald says that he saw a picture of the man Kimsey had called the best assassin in the world in the Warren Report. So McDonald says he went to Kimsey with some questions. Kimsey, who McDonald avers was the CIA's Chief of Analysis and Research, says okay, he'll tell him the story but will deny everything if McDonald repeats it.

According to McDonald, Kimsey then said Kennedy wasn't killed by a gunman in the Texas Book Depository but by a rifleman, our Mr. X, the world's greatest assassin, shooting dead ahead from the railroad tracks. McDonald also says he was told how he could find Mr. X, which our sleuth set out to do.

He found him in a London hotel, and while our putative killer was loath to give his name he said yes, I did it, did it with me own little bow and arrow for 50 grand, which even by 1963 prices had a kind of Ukranian accent, said he was hired in Guatemala at a CIA staging camp for some kind of monkeyshines by a fellow named "Troit." This Troit is only identified as an American and an "industrial saboteur."

And if you think that's screwy, McDonald says, "Now we have information that Stanton was involved in the Lincoln assassination." He also says, "I don't say the CIA officially ordered the assassination of Kennedy, but somebody in that organization was in on it. Maybe he was a rougue, but somebody in that Agency had to do it, and I don't rule out the Agency."

Given the Agency's record on trying to hit Castro, it would be logical to exclude it as a suspect. On the other hand you could argue that even a CIA agent will hit a head of state if he shoots often enough.

SHOULD BE REOPENED

For whatever it adds to McDonald's believability, he was Barry Goldwater's chief of security in 1964 — Goldwater's office confirms it — but that matters less than getting somebody to snap out of his lethargy and reopen the investigattion. The same goes for the assassination of Martin Luther King. It is ridiculous to rest that case on an investigation conducted by an agency that was trying to drive the victim to commit suicide.

Nobody believes the official explanations for these murders and the longer a competent and credible investigation is delayed the more people think it was our government that did it. If it turns out that Lincoln shot Kennedy, it's better than not knowing.

Teenage Drinking

Now that reports of drug use among young persons are supposedly decreasing, the public in general and parents in particular seem complacent over the fact that young persons in increasingly large numbers are turning to alcohol.

Some parents, in fact, are relieved over the turn of events.

However, a recent survey pointed out that alcohol use among young persons is increasing in New York State.

In grades 9-12, 65 per cent of the students reported they had been drunk at least once in the previous year, 50 per cent of those said they were drunk at least once a month, and half that many said they were drunk at least once a week. In addition, 18 per cent said they had been drunk in school at least once during the year.

Two problems of drinking by young people under 18 are cited by those who work with youth. First, since they are too young to drink legally, they are unable to take part in social situations surrounding drinking, unlike older drinkers. Thus instead of drinking to relax or be sociable, most young persons drink for the express purpose of becoming drunk.

Second, young drinkers generally are unaware of the effects of alcohol upoon them. Therefore, they drink too much and are intoxicated before they realize it.

Various approaches to the problem have been proposed. By raising the legal age for obtaining liquor from 18 to 21, the reasoning is that high-school-aged young people will be unable to buy liquor and thus will be unable to supply their younger peers.

The most serious need seems to be for education on the responsibilities of alcohol use. Young drinkers have a glaring lack of knowledge about the drug alcohol and its effects on the human body.

The Freeman recommends that since youthful drinking is starting at the pre-teen level, then the education process should begin in the elementary schools and continue through high school.

In a society that accepts moderate alcohol use, encourages drinking through advertising and in some cases glorifies the consumption of large quantities of liquor, young persons need more knowledge about the effects of alcohol and some guidelines on responsible use.

Lifeline for Humanity

During the holiday season we count our blessings and send forth greetings of joy to those dear to us. Traditionally, too, at holiday time our thoughts reach out to the wider circle of humanity. Our compassion for those less fortunate than ourselves is a key symbol of our deepest, finest human qualities.

Around the world the daily lot of millions of men, women and children is hunger, disease, despair. On their own they struggle vainly to break the vicious cycle of poverty. But, through CARE, you can extend a lifeline for humanity, for these poorest of the poor in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East.

The Freeman urges support of the CARE Crusade which will help 27 million people this coming year, mostly children. At pre-school health centers and schools, regular feedings will combat malnutrition, enabling children to grow into productive adults.

To extend this aid CARE requires $8 million in individual donations. Make Christmas a little brighter for those less fortunate than ourselves.

Bury the Hatchet

Editor, The Freeman:

I have been involved with volunteer fire service for 15 years and was utterly disgusted to read about the alleged attack on one volunteer member by two paid firemen at the Children's Library fire.

This service, whether it be paid or volunteer, is a business not a social function. It is called upon to save lives and property, not try to eliminate one or another.

I feel that this alleged attack should be thoroughly investigated and true results be published since all salaries, and equipment are paid for by taxpayers' monies. I do have the feeling that this, like everything else in Kingston, will be swept under the carpet and silenced.

I, for one, have lost a lot of respect for the paid department. Brother Firemen — that they would stoop so low. I'm also sure that they have lost respect from volunteer companies not only in the city but county-wide as well.

I wish to recall the fire at L and M Junkyard. Cordts, Union and Wicks all responded and took positions and commenced fighting the fire at hand. Along came the paid department with three men on a truck. I think the hatchet should be buried and both departments work as one.

OPEN LETTER to the
President of the
Ulster County S.P.C.A.

Mrs. Russell:

Months ago I talked with you regarding the SPCA. You advised me regarding the deficit, the budget, transfer of stocks and funds from one bank to other financial institutions, etc.

I questioned if it was proper to hire at a large salary someone serving on the Board. You told me it was. It was my understanding that the fund-raiser was to put the SPCA in better financial condition. High figures were mentioned as to the amount to be raised by him in a year.

However, we are now told we must create an IMAGE — a new Shelter, acquire property, raise $150,000.

Knowledgable gentlemen spoke at the last meeting to deaf ears. It is clear the Board wants to hear only what it wants to hear. Publicity in The Freeman with reference to a fund-raiser for the Shelter, announcement of a $150,000 Building Fund Drive is what is causing the members and public to be disturbed — to ask "What is going on at the Shelter?".

The present spay program (to avoid extra work) is now on a "cash and carry" plan. Once it was a most successful program with full cooperation of the veterinaries. There was often sufficient money to allow the spaying, on speculation, of selected Shelter animals, assuring them a better chance of adoption.

Families who could adopt an animal by the old method perhaps cannot pay the full amount, fewer animals are adopted and that could account for the very high euthanasia rate.

While people agonize over the plight of the animals, they reason this is not the time to tackle the massive job of a new Shelter. They would be more apt to cooperate if the present facilities were repaired and operated on as practical a basis as possible until economic conditions improve.

Written in all sincerity . . .

A Strong Run

Editor, The Freeman:

I like the fact you are running letters on the editorial page, so here's one from me.

Speaking about elections according to the Weekly People, the Socialist Labor Party paper, in Cleveland Ohio the SLP candidate for Mayor, Joseph Pirincin, received 1,721 votes in the non-partisan primary election held September 30.

Pirincin was the top vote getter among minority party candidates, out-polling even one of the Democratic candidates, an ex-Wallaceeite.

Four other major party candidates divided 112,000 votes among them. More than half of the registered voters refrained from voting.

Anyway, the Socialist Labor Party ran an active campaign in Cleveland.

It is encouraging that a majority of the politically discontented voters signified their support for the clear-cut revolutionary act of taking over the means of production and running them through a worker-controlled industrial union administration—the Socialist Labor Party program.

I had the pleasure of attending the annual Thanksgiving Banquet in Manhattan held on Nov. 22 for the Weekly People where over $6 thousand was raised to keep the paper going by the friends and members of the SLP!

British Dissent

By William F. Buckley, Jr.

Mr. Ivor Richard, Q.C., is nowadays the toast of the pusillanimous set, within the State Department and outside it, for his oh-so-wordly denunciation of the recent activity of his American counterpart in the United Nations, Daniel Patrick Moynihan. Mr. Richard is the ambassador from Great Britain, and he is lecturing us now on how to behave in the U.N., his special credentials being England's foreign policy during the century which bred two wars, the Versailles Peace Treaty, and approximately as many dictatorships as there were former British colonies—with the exception of Rhodesia, which Mr. Richard's superiors regularly denounce in accents that would embarrass even Mr. Moynihan.

What is it that upsets Mr. Richard? Well, it is the zeal with which Mr. Moynihan has lately denounced the policies of Colonel Amin, and the Zionist Resolution of the General Assembly. Don't you understand, Mr. Richard said in his speech to the board of directors of the United Nations Association of the U.S.A., that in fact the vaunted Arab-African majority is actually "breaking down"? That is the good news, but five minutes later Mr. Richard asked his listeners to "remember" that the new and weak countries feel "a desire for unity" because—Presumably like the Arab countries—they are so poor and weak.

What really causes Mr. Richard to despair—so much so that he quotes King Lear, and invokes the memory of Savonarola—is Mr. Moynihan's reaction to the U.N. vote on "purely ideological and emotional issues." He wouldn't catch Ivor Richard doing any such thing. "I do not see it (the U.N.) as a forum in which to argue my own particular brand of political theology." "Certainly," he went on, it is not geared as a "confrontational arena in which to 'take on' those countries whose political systems and ideology are different from mine . . . whatever else the place is, it is not the O.K. Corral and I am hardly Wyatt Earp."

I do not think that anyone would confuse Ivor Richard, Q.C., for Wyatt Earp. But I do think English ambassadors to the United Nations should thumb through the charter and the conventions of that body before coming to New York, though to be sure to read about the ideals of the United Nations is not the best preparation for tolerating it.

You see, the point of Mr. Moynihan's recent statements isn't that all countries should embrace any particular brand of political theology. If Mr. Ivor Richard were to stand up in the General Assembly and demand that everyone in the room sing "God Save the Queen," he would make himself even more absurd than he has now done. But Mr. Moynihan is not asking the U.N. to accept the hegemony of American ideals. He is asking the U.N. to accept the U.N.'s ideals.

Mr. Richard made great sport of our alleged failure at the U.N. to abide by the vote of the majority, and of our criticisms of the U.N. as an institution—"you surely do not attack Parliament itself." But Moynihan is precisely defending the institution against the brazen corruption of it by the incumbent delegates. There must be as many anti-racist manifestos in the United Nations as there are Saints' days in Costa Rica. Along comes a character from Uganda who practices racism with systematic zeal, and begins to attack other nations, including our own. And a few weeks later, by a substantial majority, the General Assembly prounounces Zionism to be a form of racism, an equation even the languid Mr. Richard knows not to be the case. Suppose the General Assembly had ordained that the square root of 25 is three: would Mr. Richard have been as tolerant?

As condescending? Because that, really, is what he is being. Moynihan is taking the United Nations seriously. That is to say, he is attaching importance to its pronouncements and activities. Only by doing so can he invest it with a sense of responsibility. Mr. Richard comes from that long line of English diplomatic wiseman who considered Hitler as "purely an ideological and emotional issue." He should realize that the United States in these days is doing the lion's share of the work in keeping the Hitlers of this world at bay, and that under the circumstances, we, uniquely, must from time to time, roar like a lion; and when we do, which is not very often, Poor Richard ought to write that down in his almanac, instead of sticking out his tongue at the teacher.

Washington Merry-Go-Round

Law and Order Score Card

WASHINGTON—During the Nixon years, law and order were honored more in the preachment than the practice.

The term was introduced to politics by Richard Kleindienst, who suffested "law and order" as a campaign cry for Barry Goldwater in 1964. John Mitchell picked it up in 1968 and made it the main theme of Richard Nixon's campaign. Spiro Agnew gave loud voice to "law and order" on the campaign trail.

As their reward, Agnew, Mitchell and Kleindienst became the chief promotors of law and order in the Nixon Administration. They joined in January, 1972, in proclaiming a major new antiicrime program. They vowed, at a cost of $160 million, to reduce crime in eight targeted cities by five per cent in two years and up to 20 per cent in five years.

The three law-and-order stalwarts later stumbled over the law themselves and wound up in varying degrees of jeopardy before the courts. Their aniti-crime program, sadly didn't fare much better.

The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) insists it is too early to assess the impact of the program upon crime. The agency's own crime figures, upon which the program was based are still unavailable.

But the FBI's crime statistice have become the official yardstick of just how much evil lurks in the hearts of men. These figures, which are accepted as scripture by lawmen everywhere, show that total crime in the eight targeted cities did not drop five per cent but shot up more than 43 per cent during the two-year, 1972-74 period.

In all fairness, the $160 million was disbursed with the particular intent of reducing homicide, rape, robbery and aggravated assault. In these categories, the eight cities did better, with an average increase of only 10.2 per cent. Two of the cities, Dallas and Newark, actually showed small declines in these more grievous crimes.

From LEAA's confidential files, we have leaned how some of the $160 million was spent. It might be enlightening to compare the expenditures with the crime figures:

— In Atlanta, a full $1.5 million was spent to purchse helicopters to increase police "visibility." Another $72,750 went "to modify existing field report forms," and $28,246 was used to hire an administrative assistant for the police chief. None of this kept the crime rate from soaring 46.4 per cent.

— In Baltimore, $442,845 was awarded to hire civilians for deskwork and, thereby, to free policemen to fight crime. Another $420,777 was invested in a helicopter patrol and $204,000 was spent for guards, TV monitors and intercoms to keep an eye and ear on public housing projects. Crime in Baltimore nerertheless, hot up an alrming 49.6 per cent.

— The city of Cleveland wangled $100,000 from LEAA for publicity. This didn't deter crime, which rose 26.7 per cent.

— Dallas spent $45,102 on a disbanded program to tie 50 sensory burglar alarms to a helicopter response system. Total crime, up 81.9 per cent, reached greater heights than the helicopters.

— Denver Spent $522,000 of its federal allotment for street lighting, but the extra light didn't seem to hinder the criminals. The crime rate was up 22.5 per cent.

— Newark also tried to shine more light on crime, with a $107,200 expendiure on street lights. An internal report also criticizes the city for failing to complete its "evaluations." The Newark crime rate has moved up 4.7 per cent.

— Portland, Ore., was granted $5,471,581 for adult corrections projects. Yet as of Sept. 30, 1974, according to a report buried in the files, "only $15,340 or .3 per cent of the total—had been expended." The city spent another $173,000 for street lighting. The crime rate, nevertheless, skyrocketed 57.5 per cent.

— The same report charges that St. Louis rushed ahead with projects "until the budget was exhausted, independent of any community input, coordinated master plan or baseline data." The crime rate, accordingly, zoomed 55.9 per cent.

Footnote: An official spokesman explained to our associate, Bob Owens, that the money was supposed to provide "more bang for the buck." The spokesman insisted that there had been "individual project successes" and a "number of instances" of reduced crime goals.

AGNEW MUZZLED: In an earlier column, we reported the backstage events that forced Spiro Agnew out of the vice presidency and lost him the chance to become President.

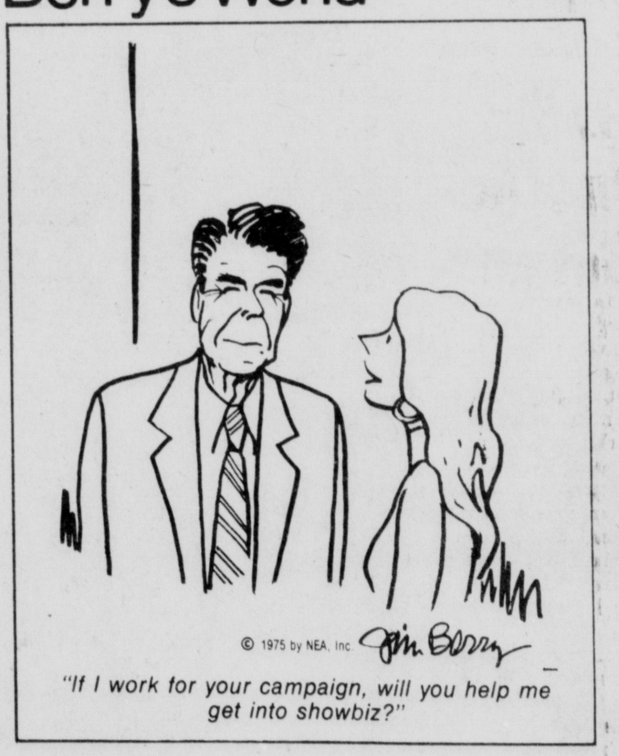

According to sources close to him, Agnew feels he was euchred out of office by former President Richard Nixon and is eager to tell the story.

However, the former Vice President is "muzzled," said a friend, for another four years. Because criminal charges still hang over Agnew's head, he won't be free to publish his book until the statute of limitations runs out.

Meanwhile his attorney and erstwhile Nixon intimate, Charles Colson, has written a book, which discusses Agnew's downfall. We have had access to the page proofs.

As Vice President, Agnew sought to be impeached by Congress rather than indicted by a grand jury. Colson claims that President Nixon worked behind the scenes on Capitol Hill to undermine Agnew. "White House lobbyists," wrote Colson, "had cut the ground out from under their own Vice President."

The World's Greatest Assassin

President Instead of Politician

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford zigzagged across the nation for months in an unsuccessful bid to stop a challenge by Ronald Reagan and presidential aides now say Ford will do most of his politicking from the White House for a while.

His strategy, they say, will be to stress his role as "the President" — even if he wasn't elected in his own right — and to see how Reagan fares in early primaries before risking an all-out battle with a fellow Republican that could divide the GOP and help the Democrats regain control of the White House.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen signaled as much by saying Ford's campaign plans were still not set but that he mainly "is going to be staying in Washington and being the President and doing all the things and making all the decisions that he has to as President."

While taking this tack, other aides say Ford naturally will make appearances in an effort to undercut Reagan's popularity and attempt to portray the former California governor as an ultraconservative who would lose to any moderate Democrat in 1976.

But the hope, they say, is that Reagan will withdraw quickly if the President does little campaigning and still manages to win the first primary Feb. 24 in New Hampshire and the third March 9 in Florida.

Moreover, they say, Ford will not look too bad if Reagan runs very well in those contests — as he is expected to — after the President has made only limited efforts there.

The risk for Ford, of course, is that Reagan may pick up so much momentum in those initial races that the President will have to turn things around fast in friendly Illinois on March 16 and roll up victories April 6 in New York and Wisconsin or find himself sliding toward premature retirement.

For the record, White House spokesman are giving no hint that Ford is deeply concerned about Reagan's candidacy yet. For example, Nessen has been telling the press daily that Ford "is confident he is going to win the nomination and confident he is going to be elected President."

When asked about Ford's plans for countering the Reagan candidacy, Nessen often says something like this: "The people will judge him both in primaries and in the general election on one thing only —his record as President ... and the direction for the future pointed to by his record as President."

By the same token, however, the White House is showing little enthusiasm for public opinion surveys these days in the early primary states. Nessen told reporters the other day, for example, that "I don't think that over the next year we're going to be able to comment on every poll and signal and straw in the wind."

At his daily news briefings, Nessen also has taken increasingly to suggesting that reporters contact the President Ford Committee responsible for organizing his 1976 campaign if they want answers to questions about it.

As for the President's temporary retreat from the campaign trail, Nessen and other White House spokesmen are uttaching little significance to it and saying that Ford simply doesn't have time for a lot of domestic political travel now.

"It has always been the plan that this would taper off during this period because of foreign travel and these very heavy demands on his time for the budget, the State of the Union message and legislative proposals," Nessen said the other day when a reporter raised the subject.

How long all of this will continue obviously will depend on the strength of Reagan's challenge. Presidential aides say Ford will start campaigning full tilt right after the Florida primary if necessary, but that he might not abandon the relatively low political profile then if the strategy is working.

10 hours Old and Needs A Fix

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI) — Jennifer was 10 hours old and needed a fix.

She screamed. Her body shook with pain and stiffened. She gasped for breath and let out a screeching cry.

Jennifer was born a methadone addict. Her system was laced with the drug before birth through her mother, an addict for six years.

For nearly two weeks, Jennifer went through withdrawal. She was irritable. Eating and sleeping were difficult.

Finally, doctors managed to detoxify her with the aid of a tranquilizer, thorazine, and near round-the-clock nursing by her mother.

The brown-haired, blue-eyed Jennifer was among 60 "addict babies" born in the past four years at the Medical College of Virginia and treated at the facility's Adolescent Medicine Clinic.

She was among the majority who lived. Today she is three years old.

"Without special treatment there's a good chance a lot of these kids wouldn't have made it," said Dr. Ted Abernathy, codirector of the program which includes pre-natal care and counseling of the mothers and children.

"All the babies are happy, healthy kids today," he said. "But we don't know what the future holds for them.

"We don't know whether being born addicts will make them more apt to become addicts when adults," Abernathy said. "We'll have to wait and see."

The clinic is believed to be the only one in the nation which conducts regular checkups of the children, Abernathy said.

Of the 60 "addict babies," about 50 were born to former heroin addicts on methadone. The mothers of the rest were active heroin addicts.

All of the babies born to mothers on methadone lived, he said. Three heroin addicts gave birth to stillborn children.

Jennifer's mother, 26, an unmarried high school dropout, was on methadone when she became pregnant.

"I wanted a child more than anything," she said. "I wanted to get big, to be a mother."

She said she felt guilty about being on drugs when pregnant and the problems addiction would cause her child. "But I did my best to overcome it.

"She's a beautiful baby and I love her," she said. "We're happy.

"I'm not too strict with her," she said, "but there's is one thing I'll never let her do, so help me — drugs."

Life On the Golan

Israeli-Occupied Syria (UPI) — On a cold, cloudy day, three cowboys nudged their horses along behind a herd of cattle on the flat, muddy plain that spreads out for miles in the central Golan Heights.

A mile away, young army privates squatted on plastic sheets, cleaning each component of their American-made, self-propelled M109 cannons. The weapons can throw a 155mm shell halfway to Damascus.

It was a quiet, routine day on the heights, scene of fierce fighting in the 1967 and 1973 Middle East wars.

"What do you think — will they sign?" a private asked, his mind on the U.N. mandate that puts 1,250 troops between the hostile armies of Israel and Syria.

The document was to expire Sunday. Syria had still not said if it would agree to renew it.

The soldiers buddies didn't know, but their commander had a firm opinion.

"The U.N. has no military value, and if that's the case it has no other value," Maj. Gen. Rafael "Rafoul" Eytan told reporters on a tour of the front lines Thursday.

"They can't even defend themselves," he said of the U.N. Disengagement Observer Force, charged with administering the troop disengagement agreement that separated the two armies in May, 1974.

"If they stay or leave it makes no difference, once either side decides to change the status quo," said Eytan, commander of Israel's northern front.

At Camp Bolivar, the headquarters for the U.N. force, Austrian Col. Ernst Juanda said the "general situation" in the 50-mile-long buffer zone that varies in width from eight miles to 300 yards was "very calm at the moment."

President Instead of Politician

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford zigzagged across the nation for months in an unsuccessful bid to stop a challenge by Ronald Reagan and presidential aides now say Ford will do most of his politicking from the White House for a while.

His strategy, they say, will be to stress his role as "the President" — even if he wasn't elected in his own right — and to see how Reagan fares in early primaries before risking an all-out battle with a fellow Republican that could divide the GOP and help the Democrats regain control of the White House.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen signaled as much by saying Ford's campaign plans were still not set but that he mainly "is going to be staying in Washington and being the President and doing all the things and making all the decisions that he has to as President."

While taking this tack, other aides say Ford naturally will make appearances in an effort to undercut Reagan's popularity and attempt to portray the former California governor as an ultraconservative who would lose to any moderate Democrat in 1976.

But the hope, they say, is that Reagan will withdraw quickly if the President does little campaigning and still manages to win the first primary Feb. 24 in New Hampshire and the third March 9 in Florida.

Moreover, they say, Ford will not look too bad if Reagan runs very well in those contests — as he is expected to — after the President has made only limited efforts there.

The risk for Ford, of course, is that Reagan may pick up so much momentum in those initial races that the President will have to turn things around fast in friendly Illinois on March 16 and roll up victories April 6 in New York and Wisconsin or find himself sliding toward premature retirement.

For the record, White House spokesman are giving no hint that Ford is deeply concerned about Reagan's candidacy yet. For example, Nessen has been telling the press daily that Ford "is confident he is going to win the nomination and confident he is going to be elected President."

When asked about Ford's plans for countering the Reagan candidacy, Nessen often says something like this: "The people will judge him both in primaries and in the general election on one thing only —his record as President ... and the direction for the future pointed to by his record as President."

By the same token, however, the White House is showing little enthusiasm for public opinion surveys these days in the early primary states. Nessen told reporters the other day, for example, that "I don't think that over the next year we're going to be able to comment on every poll and signal and straw in the wind."

At his daily news briefings, Nessen also has taken increasingly to suggesting that reporters contact the President Ford Committee responsible for organizing his 1976 campaign if they want answers to questions about it.

As for the President's temporary retreat from the campaign trail, Nessen and other White House spokesmen are uttaching little significance to it and saying that Ford simply doesn't have time for a lot of domestic political travel now.

"It has always been the plan that this would taper off during this period because of foreign travel and these very heavy demands on his time for the budget, the State of the Union message and legislative proposals," Nessen said the other day when a reporter raised the subject.

How long all of this will continue obviously will depend on the strength of Reagan's challenge. Presidential aides say Ford will start campaigning full tilt right after the Florida primary if necessary, but that he might not abandon the relatively low political profile then if the strategy is working.

10 hours Old and Needs A Fix

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI) — Jennifer was 10 hours old and needed a fix.

She screamed. Her body shook with pain and stiffened. She gasped for breath and let out a screeching cry.

Jennifer was born a methadone addict. Her system was laced with the drug before birth through her mother, an addict for six years.

For nearly two weeks, Jennifer went through withdrawal. She was irritable. Eating and sleeping were difficult.

Finally, doctors managed to detoxify her with the aid of a tranquilizer, thorazine, and near round-the-clock nursing by her mother.

The brown-haired, blue-eyed Jennifer was among 60 "addict babies" born in the past four years at the Medical College of Virginia and treated at the facility's Adolescent Medicine Clinic.

She was among the majority who lived. Today she is three years old.

"Without special treatment there's a good chance a lot of these kids wouldn't have made it," said Dr. Ted Abernathy, codirector of the program which includes pre-natal care and counseling of the mothers and children.

"All the babies are happy, healthy kids today," he said. "But we don't know what the future holds for them.

"We don't know whether being born addicts will make them more apt to become addicts when adults," Abernathy said. "We'll have to wait and see."

The clinic is believed to be the only one in the nation which conducts regular check-ups of the children, Abernathy said.

Of the 60 "addict babies," about 50 were born to former heroin addicts on methadone. The mothers of the rest were active heroin addicts.

All of the babies born to mothers on methadone lived, he said. Three heroin addicts gave birth to stillborn children.

Jennifer's mother, 26, an unmarried high school dropout, was on methadone when she became pregnant.

"I wanted a child more than anything," she said. "I wanted to get big, to be a mother."

She said she felt guilty about being on drugs when pregnant and the problems addiction would cause her child. "But I did my best to overcome it.

"She's a beautiful baby and I love her," she said. "We're happy.

"I'm not too strict with her," she said, "but there's is one thing I'll never let her do, so help me — drugs."

Life On the Golan

Israeli-Occupied Syria (UPI) — On a cold, cloudy day, three cowboys nudged their horses along behind a herd of cattle on the flat, muddy plain that spreads out for miles in the central Golan Heights.

A mile away, young army privates squatted on plastic sheets, cleaning each component of their American-made, self-propelled M109 cannons. The weapons can throw a 155mm shell halfway to Damascus.

It was a quiet, routine day on the heights, scene of fierce fighting in the 1967 and 1973 Middle East wars.

"What do you think — will they sign?" a private asked, his mind on the U.N. mandate that puts 1,250 troops between the hostile armies of Israel and Syria.

The document was to expire Sunday. Syria had still not said if it would agree to renew it.

The soldiers buddies didn't know, but their commander had a firm opinion.

"The U.N. has no military value, and if that's the case it has no other value," Maj. Gen. Rafael "Rafoul" Eytan told reporters on a tour of the front lines Thursday.

"They can't even defend themselves," he said of the U.N. Disengagement Observer Force, charged with administering the troop disengagement agreement that separated the two armies in May, 1974.

"If they stay or leave it makes no difference, once either side decides to change the status quo," said Eytan, commander of Israel's northern front.

At Camp Bolivar, the headquarters for the U.N. force, Austrian Col. Ernst Juanda said the "general situation" in the 50-mile-long buffer zone that varies in width from eight miles to 300 yards was "very calm at the moment."

A Free Ride for the Criminal, But Victim Has to Ante Up $$

NEWARK, N.J. (UPI) — She is 75 years old and lives alone on a small, fixed income in Somerset County.

One night, a burglar entered and ransacked her three-room apartment. On his way out — just to make sure the old woman could not identify the intruder — he gouged her eyes out.

New Jersey is one of only nine states with provisions for compensation of victims of violent crimes. Its Violent Crimes Compensation Board was set up four years ago. But its $1.1 million annual budget is hardly sufficient to pay the hundreds of victims.

The 75-year-old woman was awarded $10,000, according to Carl Jahnke, chairman of the board. It was the maximum the board is allowed to give an individual. Other states can pay more.

Other victims have been given sums as small as $100 to repay only pecuniary damages. There is nothing to pay them for pain and suffering.

Recently, Stanley Van Ness, the state's public advocate, filed suit against the board charging that its existence was one of the best-kept secrets in New Jersey.

Specifically, Van Ness went to bat for a rape victim who did not know she could file for compensation until the statute of limitations was up.

But, Jahnke said the board had a 150 per cent rise in claims last year, partially due to publicity.

An innocent victim may apply to the board within a year if he has lost two consecutive weeks of pay or if his insurance does not completely cover his medical costs.

"Little, if anything, is said about the victim," says Jahnke. "A criminal gets a free ride to jail but a victim even has to pay for an ambulance. And it really doesn't help the victim if his attacker is thrown in jail."

Last year, the board awarded damages to approximately 125 victims a month or slightly over 1,500 for the year. That is only five per cent of the violent crimes in New Jersey, Jahnke says.

A victim must first prove to the board that he is innocent. Then he must not have any other sources of compensation such as medical insurance.

"Some may say that our budget could be used mmre efficiently for increased police protection," says Jahnke. "But I think a better argument is that maybe the victims are entitled to a greater share of money being spent on our criminal justice system."

Last year, two men who were severely injured in a tavern holdup, filed a claim with the board.

"They were injured very badly," Jahnke said. "They were also holding up the tavern. If you ever want a definition of chutzpah — that's it."

The board found the two men were not innocent victims. Later, they were indicted and tried on robbery charges.

It takes about nine months for a claim to be processed and for a victim to receive compensation.

"It's not easy to get a claim resolved," Jahnke said. "We have to determine if a victim is innocent or if he contributed to his injury by his conduct."

The board and its eight staff members are looking for more money to increase their budget, Jahnke said.

There are nine bills in Congress to increase funding to each of the state's with such boards.

Benefits in New Jersey are the lowest. California offers the highest maximum awards — $24,000. In Maryland it is $45,000 and New York, $15,000.

Jahnke told of the case of a partially blind man from Red Bank, N.J., who left his two young children to take a walk on Christmas Day. He was robbed and beaten. His assailants put an icepick through his one good eye.

"What are we going to do in a case like that?" Jahnke said. "We gave him the maximum award but thut's only $120 a month until it reaches $10,000. How is a blind man going to support his family?"

Hard Winter . . . No Agreement Here

The woolly worms are wearing their light maroon coats for winter. That, according to folklore buff Willie Smith, means a mild winter.

But sunspots, as observed by meteorology Prof. Hurd Willet of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, presage a cold and snowy winter.

Bunk, says climatologist Jack Villmow. The winter will be whatever it wants to be and not even scientists can predict it accurately.

But folklore prognosticators have their sure-fire omens of the coming season.

As a matter of fact, the season, not officially due until Dec. 21, is already here, according to Smith.

Smith, a 76-year-old transplanted Texan who does his weather watching in the Murphysboro area of southern Illinois, says that when the redbird falls silent, it means winter has arrived.

"And I haven't heard a redbird sing in two or three weeks," said Smith.

But winter won't be too harsh. "I'd say we'll probably have a mild winter," said Smith.

He says woolly worms are a sure clue to the coming season.

"A maroon woolly worm with a thin coat means a mild winter. When it's black and thick, you can almost bet your last dollar you're in for a hard winter."

Smith has been in the hospital for gout and hasn't had much time to observe. But he says woolly worms reportedly are maroon this year.

Hurd, who bases his forecasts partially on sunspot activity, says the eastern portion of the nation is in for a rough winter with a "prolonged spell of very cold weather" and "snow accumulation generally heavier than normal."

But not only are Hurd's sunspots at odds with the woolly worm. They also disagree with the bears and birds.

Ilmar Czeckowicz, 67, of Tower, Minn., says bears are expecting a mild winter.

"They're skinny," he says, "Not so much fat to protect them from the cold. When it's going to be cold, they get real fat — to keep warm."

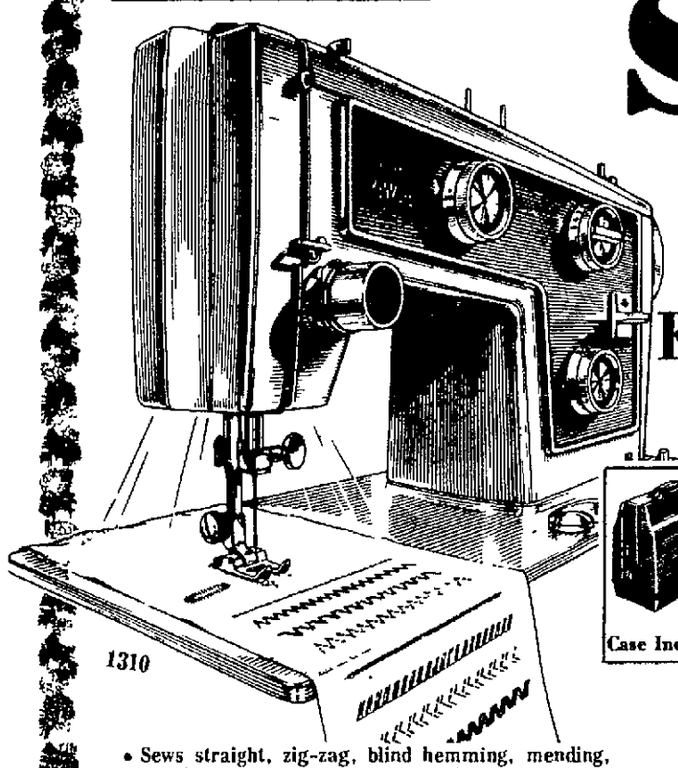

Annie Edwards, a weather seer who makes her home near Jacksboro, Tenn., says there aren't a lot of birds' nests and the ones she's seen have been "neat but downright shoddy. There ain't nothin' to 'em."

That, she says, means the birds aren't expecting too much of a chill.

Thesis, Bikini Sextant

BEAUMONT, Tex. (UPI) — Math student Katheryn King wrote her master's thesis on celestial navigation. But some of her professors didn't appreciate the figure she used.

Miss King, a straight-A graduate student at Lamar University, illustrated her thesis with several photographs — including a snapshot of herself in a bikini demonstrating the use of a sextant.

Miss King, 24, said she was wearing the bikini because she had to stand outside for an hour on a hot, sunny day using the sextant, an instrument that measures directions by the angle of the sun.

But P.W. Latimer, acting head of the Lamar math department, was not impressed with her desire for comfort. Latimer refused to approve her thesis despite support from two other members of the committee who interviewed Miss King.

Latimer complained the picture was not detailed enough to show the parts of the sextant. He also suggested the picture, a full body shot, could have been cropped to show only Miss King's face and hands.

"I think the apparatus should be highlighted," said Latimer. "I do not think the pictures serve the purpose they are supposed to achieve."

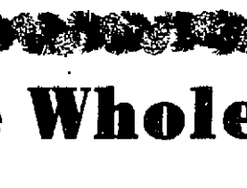

Dr. Sterling C. Crim, one of the examining committee members who endorsed Miss King's work, accused Latimer of sex discrimination and censorship.

"A student must have some artistic license," he said. "It is very unusual to question this sort of thing."

Stamps, Debts, Funding

Roll Call

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Legislation that would reform the food stamp program, raise the federal debt ceiling and retain the present level of federal funding for anti-poverty programs highlighted the pre-Thanksgiving activities of the House of Representatives.

The food stamp reform amendment generated the most debate before it was rejected by a 230-169 vote. If approved, it would have limited food stamp eligibility to only those households with yearly incomes below federal poverty levels.

Under present law, food stamps are available on a month-by-month basis to any household whose income is diminished by what the local program director determines to be "substantial limiting factors." For instance, a middle income family which suddenly loses its source of income may become eligible for a month or two, although its yearly income exceeds federal poverty levels.

Congressman Hamilton Fish Jr. (R-25) voted in favor of the reform amendment; Congressman Benjamin Gilman (R-26) voted against the amendment. Congressman Matthew McHugh did not vote.

Although the reform amendment was defeated, changes in the food stamp program are still expected. The House Agriculture Committee is presently at work on a seperate and more thorough reform measure. The amendment was intended, in part, to prompt the committee to complete its work more quickly.

The closest vote of the week involved a bill raising the federal debt ceiling from $577 billion to $595 Billion. It was passed by a 213-198 margin, with McHugh voting in favor and Fish and Gilman casting negative votes. The bill was supported by the admnistration.

Passage of the bill reversed the House's rejection of a similar bill in late October. It was cleared just one day before the previous debt limit was scheduled to expire, allowing the federal government to meet current spending obligations.

The bill keeping at 80 per cent the federal share of matching grants awarded under the federal anti-poverty programs was passed by a 244-172 margin. Gilman and McHugh voted in favor of the measure; Fish did not vote.

The bill was designed to thwart previously passed legislation to gradually lower the federal share of anti-poverty funding to 60 per cent in fiscal 1977. Supporters argued, however, that such a move would place a greater financial burden on the states and localities and could necessarily result in a reduction of the number of anti-poverty programs currently in effect.

At the other end of Capitol Hill, the Senate voted on several major bills prior to the Thanksgiving recess. And, characteristically, New York State's two Senators failed to agree most of the time. An amendment that would have reduced the overall defense appropriation ceiling from $90.8 billion to $90.2 billion for fiscal 1976 was rejected, 55-38, Sen. Jacob Javits voted in favor; Senator James Buckley voted against.

The two Republican Senators also disagreed on an amendment to partially dismantle the nation's only anti-ballistic missile site, located in North Dakota. Only the site's radar system for detecting Soviet missiles launched over the North Pole would be retained.

The AMB site, which cost $6 billion to construct, is already outdated by new missile technology. The amendment would, in effect, speed up the Pentagon's time table for dismantling it.

The amendment was adopted, 52-47. Javits voted yes, Buckley voted no.

Javits also voted in favor of a pro-labor bill extending to construction unions many of the job-site picketing rights now allowed industrial unions. The bill was passed, 52-45, and sent to conference with the House. Buckley did not vote.

A tax reform amendment, which stated that the projected 1976 federal dificit be trimmed by $300 million by closing tax loopholes was rejected. 76 to 21. The amendment never specified which tax loopholes would be closed, however, and was simply intended to place the Senate on record in support of tax reform. Both Buckley and Javits voted against the amendment.

Just A No-Win Stance

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Arms control experts say there have been some "ambiguities" but no outright violations by the Soviet Union in executing the SALT-1 strategic arms agreement of 1972.

But they say if the administration opens up the record to prove that the Russians have not cheated it will itself violate a key clause protecting the confidentiality of the U.S.-Soviet Standing Consultative Commission.

"We are in a no-win situation trying to counter these charges of violations," officials said in a background interview at the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

The Administration has been under pressure from private arms control groups and university disarmament specialists to lay out the record in public. A deadlock exists over a House committee's insistence on seeing a memo in which former defense secretary James A. Schlesinger reportedly listed Russian violations and suggested a National Security Council meeting to consider them.

Stamps, Debts, Funding

Roll Call

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Legislation that would reform the food stamp program, raise the federal debt ceiling and retain the present level of federal funding for anti-poverty programs highlighted the pre-Thanksgiving activities of the House of Representatives.

The food stamp reform amendment generated the most debate before it was rejected by a 230-159 vote. If approved, it would have limited food stamp eligibility to only those households with yearly incomes below federal poverty levels.

Under present law, food stamps are available on a month-by-month basis to any household whose income is diminished by what the local program director determines to be "substantial limiting factors." For instance, a middle income family which suddenly loses its source of income may become eligible for a month or two, although its yearly income exceeds federal poverty levels.

Congressman Hamilton Fish Jr. (R-25) voted in favor of the reform amendment; Congressman Benjamin Gilman (R-26) voted against the amendment. Congressman Matthew McHugh did not vote.

Although the reform amendment was defeated, changes in the food stamp program are still expected. The House Agriculture Committee is presently at work on a seperate and more thorough reform measure. The amendment was intended, in part, to prompt the committee to complete its work more quickly.

The closest vote of the week involved a bill raising the federal debt ceiling from $577 billion to $595 Billion. It was passed by a 213-198 margin, with McHugh voting in favor and Fish and Gilman casting negative votes. The bill was supported by the admnistration.

Passage of the bill reversed the House's rejection of a similar bill in late October. It was cleared just one day before the previous debt limit was scheduled to expire, allowing the federal government to meet current spending obligations.

The bill keeping at 80 per cent the federal share of matching grants awarded under the federal anti-poverty programs was passed by a 244-172 margin. Gilman and McHugh voted in favor of the measure; Fish did not vote.

N.Y.'s Grraffiti Masters... 'We're Writers, Not Artists'

NEW YORK (UPI) — New York's largest underground traveling art show began with a signature.

All graffiti, according to the purists, are signatures. The designs have become increasingly elaborate to the point where they often bear slight resemblance to the signature itself. Some of these highly embellished names now are themselves signed by their creators. But the subject is still the artist's name.

The graffiti masters who carefully apply their names to the sides of subway cars do not consider themselves artists.

"We're writers," says Frank Del Toro, 18, who emblazoned FDT 56 on all the trains he could before retiring two years ago. "We're just doin' it for the doin' it. We don't think we're artists."

Neither does the Transit Authority.

But some people do.

Jack Stewart, an artist who teaches at Queens College, is writing a book on the subject, called "M.T.A. — Mass Transit Art."

"I've tried to find a place for it in the classification of urban folk art," Stewart said. "A professor at NYU, a Ph.D. over there, suggested to me that if you could consider it folk art, you might equally be able to consider it heraldry.

"I'm still thinking that one over."

Subway graffiti began with modest but persistent squiggles — "hits" — applied to station walls with felt-tip markers. Stewart dates the start at 1970.

"A kid named Demetrious, TAKI 183. He was hitting the walls about '70. Then in '71 he started hitting inside subway cars, and in the winter of '71-72, outside of cars.

"In the summer of '72, it blossomed."

It has been one long headache for the Transit Authority, which spent over $20 million to clean the cars in 1972 and now plans a "total package" approach with anti-graffiti coating for the trains and "expert guidance" for any youngster caught defacing a train.

John de Roos, TA senior executive officer, said "expert guidance" meant that volunteer graduate students from John Jay College of Criminal Justice would counsel offenders. But the $500,000 program is stalled.

"As you know, the city is under some minor budgetary restrictions," said De Roos, who considers graffiti a social problem.

"They (graffitists) come from all walks of life. One was the son of a lawyer. Most are somewhat neglected," he said.

"We've met with some 14 boys and girls in the board rooms. They range in age from about 9 to 15. Our chief of police (former New York City Council President Sanford Garelik) said, 'If you clean them up, gave them a bath, they'd be quite huggable.'

EXAMPLE OF 'ART FORM' . . . UNDERGROUND-STYLE

(UPI)

"One child, a 13-year-old, has no parents, has a paper route, goes to school and sleeps in a warehouse. It's hard to be angry at someone who keeps body and soul together like that," he said.

"On an individual basis ... Vinnie — his name appears on a couple of hundred of my cars — he looks so cute, I had to remember he costs me a couple of million dollars. That helped keep me angry."

Jack Stewart feels that city anger helped fuel the spread of graffiti.

"In the fall of '72, the last year of (Mayor John V.) Lindsay, Lindsay had apoplexy. He decided to clean the cars and punish the artists," he said.

Offenders were sentenced to swab down the trains, their penitence duly recorded by television news cameras.

"The writers began to realize there were ways of getting their name promoted through the media. This is what they were concerned with — getting the name out," Stewart said.

FDT 56 — he uses his initials and the number of his home street — confirms this.

"Guys like me, all they look for is fame, that's all they want," he said. "Like, I made it in the paper three times — four times. And I made it on TV 22 times."

Stewart says the scrubbing squads had another effect.

"It turned out to be a communal activity for them, to meet other graffiti writers."

Names became faces, then collaborators. Teams would sneak into the subway yards at night.

"It's almost a subculture," de Roos said. "They work in threesand four-man teams. One designs, one traces, and one paints — in three colors."

Stewart thinks the effect is beneficial.

"Subway graffiti has been a social catalyst for all the kids in all the boroughs. Before, you had the turf mentality. Bronx kids were scared to go into Brooklyn."

Now, he says, kids who spray a masterpiece in the Bronx yards will have their work displayed to design-hungry underground artists in Brooklyn's Sheepshead Bay section.

This communal spirit has become formalized. Hugo Martinez, then a design student at City College, helped organize United Graffiti Artists in 1972 "to redirect their work to legitimate surfaces." UGA has held gallery showings of "studio graffiti," most recently at Artists Space, a gallery at 156 Wooster Street.

A gallery spokeswoman said none of the works was sold, but Martinez said two of the exhibitors — BAMA (Richard Admiral, 22) and PHASE 2 (Lonnie Marrow, 20), both of the Bronx — have won art scholarships to Pratt Institute.

John de Roos doesn't think it's art.

"It's been suggested they're looking for recognition as artists. I don't think that's true. They do it as children looking for attention, not as artists looking for recognition. The mere fact they met with us — it already did them a world of good."

Jack Stewart thinks graffiti won't survive the trip from the tunnels to the galleries.

"Putting it on canvas has really hurt. You lose the spontaneity," he said. Stewart feels the artist needs the danger and excitement of painting on the side of a train, so "it's almost like a miracle when you see it go by."

Martinez partly agrees.

"The element of danger, rebellion, is like a ritual. The excitement, the cops make it more fraught with tension. You had to psych yourself up, like for a big game."

And on canvas, without the danger?

"All those things have to be internalized. These guys don't have to paint trains the rest of their lives."

The Great Christmas Tree Debate Goes On

NEW YORK (UPI) — Artificial versus real, the great Christmas tree debate goes on.

The trend in recent years has been to artificial trees. But there is a growing counter-trend to natural trees.

Nurserymen say natural trees will again be preferred. Firms selling simulated trees say theirs will win out.

One biggy among Christmas trees in New York — the one that will tower in all its 60-foot splendor over the Rockefeller Center skating rink — remains for real.

"There are ecological problems involved in the purchase of real trees," said Karen Fox, who works a Manhattan firm purveying artificial trees. "Why kill a tree every year?"

But David Remnek, part owner of a Manhattan nursery firm, said cutting down a tree can be a good thing.

"Part of forestry is eliminating trees from time to time," he said. "Otherwise, they would crowd together and inhibit growth of the entire forest."

Miss Fox said artificial trees range in price from $15 for a six-footer to $1,420 for a 25-foot luxuriant, albeit immitation, scotch pine. But they last seven or more years.

Besides, she said, they are fireproof

Charlie Allen, partner in a natural tree firm, hung a garland of words on the evergreen bows of the natural tree defense.

"People want to come back to nature, to the natural smells of spruces and pines which give a house a wonderful feeling," he said.

The balsalm is now the most popular of the natural trees because it sells for about $8 in its five- to seven-foot cut form. The spruce and the Douglas fir are much thicker and shaplier but twice the price.

Back on the simulated tree side, Ruth Tehan, employed by an artificial tree manufacturer in Queens, said, "We've got simulated spruce, simulated pine, simulated everything."

She maintained simulation makes for perfection.

"Our scotch pine is softer and has more luxurious branches than a real pine," she said.

But Lorene Demelo, a member of the New York City Parks Council, roots for the real thing.

"I love the smell of a fresh Christmas tree," she said. "I've always insisted that my mother have one for her four children and now we've carried the tradition into our own homes."

Picking a cut tree requires some pointers about needles, Allen said.

"If not many needles fall off when you inspect it," he said, "chances are they won't once you get it home."

He also suggested indications of a healthy tree are a fulsome uniformity of branches and a verdant green color.

Rockefeller Center takes care in its selection of a tree.

Jim Reed, spokesman for the center, said officials make eight or mmre inspection trips to personally view prospects after first demanding photos by mail from persons who write offering their big ones, often because they've outgrown available space.

This year's selection, surprisingly, is a balsalm from Connecticutt. Most past center trees have been Norway spruce.

"In the fall of '72, the last year of (Mayor John V.) Lindsay, Lindsay had apoplexy. He decided to clean the cars and punish the artists," he said.

Offenders were sentenced to swab down the trains, thsir penitence duly recorded by television news cameras.

"The writers began to realize there were ways of getting their name promoted through the media. This is what they were concerned with — getting the name out," Stewart said.

FDT 56 — he uses his initials and the number of his home street — confirms this.

"Guys like me, all they look for is fame, that's all they want," he said. "Like, I made it in the paper three times — four times. And I made it on TV 22 times."

Stewart says the scrubbing squads had another effect.

"It turned out to be a communal activity for them, to meet other graffiti writers."

Names became faces, then collaborators. Teams would sneak into the subway yards at night.

"It's almost a subculture," de Roos said. "They work in threeand four-man teams. One designs, one traces, and one paints — in three colors."

Stewart thinks the effect is beneficial.

"Subway graffiti has been a social catalyst for all the kids in all the boroughs. Before, you had the turf mentality. Bronx kids were scared to go into Brooklyn."

Now, he says, kids who spray a masterpiece in the Bronx yards will have their work displayed to design-hungry underground artists in Brooklyn's Sheepshead Bay section.

This communal spirit has become formalized. Hugo Martinez, then a design student at City College, helped organize United Graffiti Artists in 1972 "to redirect their work to legitimate surfaces." UGA has held gallery showings of "studio graffiti," most recently at Artists Space, a gallery at 156 Wooster Street.

A gallery spokeswoman said none of the works was sold, but Martinez said two of the exhibitors — BAMA (Richard Admiral, 22) and PHASE 2 (Lonnie Marrow, 20), both of the Bronx — have won art scholarships to Pratt Institute.

John de Roos doesn't think it's art.

"It's been suggested they're looking for recognition as artists. I don't think that's true. They do it as children looking for attention, not as artists looking for recognition. The mere fact they met with us — it already did them a world of good."

Jack Stewart thinks graffiti won't survive the trip from the tunnels to the galleries.

"Putting it on canvas has really hurt. You lose the spontaneity," he said. Stewart feels the artist needs the danger and excitement of painting on the side of a train, so "it's almost like a miracle when you see it go by."

Martinez partly agrees.

"The element of danger, rebellion, is like a ritual. The excitement, the cops make it more fraught with tension. You had to psych yourself up, like for a big game."

And on canvas, without the danger?

"All those things have to be internalized. These guys don't have to paint trains the rest of their lives."

The Great Christmas Tree Debate Goes On

NEW YORK (UPI) — Artificial versus real, the great Christmas tree debate goes on.

The trend in recent years has been to artificial trees. But there is a growing counter-trend to natural trees.

Nurserymen say natural trees will again be preferred. Firms selling simulated trees say theirs will win out.

One biggy among Christmas trees in New York — the one that will tower in all its 60-foot splendor over the Rockefeller Center skating rink — remains for real.

"There are ecological problems involved in the purchase of real trees," said Karen Fox, who works a Manhattan firm purveying artificial trees. "Why kill a tree every year?"

But David Remnek, part owner of a Manhattan nursery firm, said cutting down a tree can be a good thing.

"Part of forestry is eliminating trees from time to time," he said. "Otherwise, they would crowd together and inhibit growth of the entire forest."

Miss Fox said artificial trees range in price from $15 for a six-footer to $1,420 for a 25-foot luxuriant, albeit immitation, scotch pine. But they last seven or more years.

Besides, she said, they are fireproof.

Charlie Allen, partner in a natural tree firm, hung a garland of words on the evergreen bows of the natural tree defense.

"People want to come back to nature, to the natural smells of spruces and pines which give a house a wonderful feeling," he said.

The balsalm is now the most popular of the natural trees because it sells for about $8 in its five- to seven-foot cut form. The spruce and the Douglas fir are much thicker and shaplier but twice the price.

Back on the simulated tree side, Ruth Tehan, employed by an artificial tree manufacturer in Queens, said, "We've got simulated spruce, simulated pine, simulated everything."

She maintained simulation makes for perfection.

"Our scotch pine is softer and has more luxurious branches than a real pine," she said.

But Lorene Demelo, a member of the New York City Parks Council, roots for the real thing.

"I love the smell of a fresh Christmas tree," she said. "I've always insisted that my mother have one for her four children and now we've carried the tradition into our own homes."

Picking a cut tree requires some pointers about needles, Allen said.

"If not many needles fall off when you inspect it," he said, "chances are they won't once you get it home."

He also suggested indications of a healthy tree are a fulsome uniformity of branches and a verdant green color.

Rockefeller Center takes care in its selection of a tree.

Jim Reed, spokesman for the center, said officials make eight or mmre inspection trips to personally view prospects after first demanding photos by mail from persons who write offering their big ones, often because they've outgrown available space.

This year's selection, surprisingly, is a balsalm from Connecticutt. Most past center trees have been Norway spruce.

43-Month Pipeline Project Biggest Ever

Almost Utopia in Northern Alaska

PRUDHOE BAY, Alaska (UPI) — The worker's paradise espoused by the Soviets is a capitalistic reality here in the blizzard-swept tundra of northern Alaska where generations of Russians once suffered and froze seeking a few paltry rubles' worth of furs.

The Americans are determined to bring to their world some 26 trillion cubic feet of poisonous, explosive gas and an estimated 9.6 billion barrels of near-boiling oil that lie thousands of feet below the permanently frozen land where Russia's hunters trapped the Arctic fox and the mink.

If successful, about an eight-hour flow of crude oil through the 47-inch Alyeska pipeline will repay the Americans their $7.2 million purchase price of Alaska 108 years ago.

Even at today's acknowledged "cheap" petroleum prices the 11 companies developing the Prudhoe Bay field and the 798-mile pipeline will gross some $18 million a day, seven days a week and no holidays when the oil flows at full capacity into the tankers docked at Prince William Sound.

The best estimates of Atlantic Richfield's engineers put the total cost of developing the 200-square-mile Prudhoe field at $6.5 billion. An equal sum is being spent on the 42-month pipeline project that will traverse Alaska and feed the oil into the ice-free port of Valdez.

Only for fighting his wars has man ever spent more money for human achievement.

After the expenditure of that $13 billion will come the task of getting the estimated 26 trillion cubic feet of natural gas to American kitchens. By all estimates this project — due for completion in the early 1980s — will be the biggest construction job ever attempted.

Every hour the Prudhoe oil stays in the ground costs the participating companies thousands of dollars. Speed is essential, and few sacrifices too great to meet the deadline of late 1977 when the first valve is scheduled to open sending the 165-degree crude on its four-and-a-half-day trip across the Brooks Range and central Alaska to the waiting tankers.

To guarantee that there will be no work stoppages the oil companies and construction firms have offered the highest wages in the world and the most luxurious fringe benefits in return for no-strike labor contracts.

During a recent visit of Norway's King Olav V, the Atlantic Richfield cook, who broiled the King's steak, got paid nearly as much as His Majesty.

A political appointee in the defeated Eagan administration left his cluttered desk in the capitol at Juneau for an $1,100 a week truck driving job on the pipeline.

Most of the sub-contractors work on a cost plus arrangement where they are paid their costs of completing the job plus 20 per cent of these expenditures. Thus, there is little attempt to pare labor costs.

The big wages go only to the craftsmen — the welders, the mechanics, drillers, carpenters and millwrights. All hiring is done through the unions who are held responsible for providing and maintaining not only an adequate, but a trained, skilled labor force.

The highly-unionized welders average between $55,000 and $65,000 a year plus fringe benefits. They have, upon occasion, shown such a royal disdain for their fellow workers that they have relegated them to seats in the rear of the buses shuttling between the base camps and job sites.

Prudhoe Bay offers the very latest in luxury accommodations in what has to be one of the most miserable environments. For 56 days in mid-winter the sun never rises above the horizon and the temperatures drop to between 55 and 60 degrees below zero fahrenheit.

The sub zero temperatures when combined with an arctic blizzard occasionally drive the temperatures to a chill factor equivalent to 115 degrees below zero.

British Petroleum and its partner Standard Oil of Ohio have spent millions on their housing facility which includes a jogging track, swimming pool and imported greenery.

BP and Atlantic Richfield who are drilling the 150 producing wells at Prudhoe for themselves and their nine partners have done everything possible to entice and keep their drillers, roustabouts and riggers happy under what are undoubtedly the worst working conditions in the world.

Atlantic Richfield's 210 employees work 12-hour days, seven days a week and are then flown out at company expense to their homes in Fairbanks, Barrow or Anchorage for a week's rest.

Each job is performed by two men, one working one week, the other working the alternate week. One veteran driller who has been on the North Slope for six years points out that it is the only job in the world where he gets paid for 52 weeks work while working only 28.

The food is undoubtedly the best served anywhere within the entire arctic circle and thousands of square miles outside of it. For although the wages are the prime inducement, the contractors have found that the living conditions, accommodations and food are equally important, particularly as no liquor of any kind is allowed at Prudhoe or in the pipe line camps.

Because of the great demand for jobs, the companies have been able to demand and get the best possible talent in all the required trades, and they have the right to fire workers for incompetency. Several top executives of one of the prime contracting firms were fired when Alyeska decided there were too many bodies and not enough muscle being applied on the job.

Many of the welders and construction types quit as soon as they make their bundle, "but," explained one contractor, "we never have many labor problems as there are always plenty of volunteers to fill the vacancies."

Don't Let Thieves Spoil Your Yule

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Yuletide is a time to keep your guard up, says insurance man David Glass.

Glass, who is loss control manager for Fireman's Fund American Insurance Companies, says houses and apartments are more vulnerable at holiday time when parties, seasonal visiting, last-minute shopping and fewer daylight hours leave the way clear for break-ins.

To thwart burglars, he suggests:

Light entrances. Don't give thieves a shadowy place to work.

If you must leave town, a recording on an automatic telephone answering device can help protect you. Record a message that you are out of town, but that guests are staying in your home whom you don't want disturbed. Then add that callers should leave a name and number for you to return their call.

Locking doors and windows won't guarantee safety from burglars, but it could prove enough of an irritant to make a thief look for easier victims.

Secure the door of an attached garage. If a thief can enter there, he has both a quiet place in which to work and access to your tools.

Keep valuables out of sight.

The Bank Aids Bicentennial Projects

KINGSTON

Kingston Trust has awarded $500 to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Historical Society and $400 to the Mendelssohn Club of Kingston as part of its program to help local organizations with their bicentennial plans.

Under the program, The Bank has set aside a $5,000 fund to provide mini ni grants of from $50 to $500 to voluntary non-profit groups whose bicentennial projects require financial support.

"These two organizations' applications were among the earliest received and, therefore, were among the first considered," said Robert Stubbs, YMCA firestor and chairman of The Bank's special advisory board to select grant recipients. "We have had good response to the program and expect to be announcing additional awards soon."

The historical society will use the grant to underwrite costs of a number of exhibit cases for its newly acquired museum building in High Falls. The cases will be used to displey the "Phillipsport Papers," a recent git which will be housed with the society's other canal artifacts and documents.

The Mendelssohn Club has planned a series of three local concerts in 1976, one of which will feature the West Point Glee Club and a community mixed chorus, and another involving the massed chorus of the Mohawk-Hudson Male Chorus Association and guest artists. Favorable consideration of the award reflected the glee club's long history of contributions to civic pride and local communtiy spirit, officials said.

Persistence Pays Federal Rewards

NEW YORK (UPI) — The small business man who needs desperately to fix up his plant to comply with the tough new federal safety and anti-pollution laws can get help from Uncle Sam — if he's persistent enough.

Frank S. Ryan, president of St. Paul Brass Foundry Co. in Minnesota discovered that after Occupational Safety and Health Act inspectors ordered his foundry, which employs only 90 workers, to make changes in its plant that would cost more than $400,000.

The changes were ordered to get rid of lead fumes and silica dust. They involved nothing less than converting from gas-fired melting furnaces to electric induction furnaces.

"When it was all over, we were pleasantly surprised to discover that the electric fuel bill was no higher than our gas bill had been," Ryan said. "Perhaps we just had been wasteful with gas."

But it took Ryan almost a year to find the money and during that time the cost of the required improvements escalated by $150,000 from the original $250,000 figure.

"The banks wanted no part of financing a long-term 'non-productive' environmental control project so we had to turn to the federal Small Business Administration," Ryan said.

He said he thinks his experience will be of great interest to the owners of around 4,200 other foundries in the country and many other small business men.

"You can get the necessary money from Uncle Sam if you hang in there and learn the ropes," Ryan said. "As a natural political conservative I didn't expect to get too much sympathetic attention from the government people or from Minnesota's liberal politicians but some of those boys on the other side of the political fence really went to bat for us and earned my admiration and respect."

Ryan's advice to companies that need SBA loans to comply with OSHA rules:

- Don't take the interpretations of the law and programs by local SBA or OSHA representatives for gospel. The locals often don't fully understand the programs. Be ready to take your case to Washington. St. Paul Brass originally was told by local SBA people they had to be in compliance with OSHA before they could get a loan, Ryan said. They found out that's not true.
- Do your own research; don't depend on the government people to do it for you. On one day, Ryan said he was told by a local federal official the SBA-OSHA loan program had been canceled. The next day he read in the paper Congress had voted more money for it.
- Ask your local legislators for help, particularly in getting accurate information. They can get access to the top brass in Washington a lot faster than local representatives of the federal agencies. "We tucned to our legislators to get the dope from the horse's mouth and it worked," he said.

Ryan is the newly elected president of the American Foundrymen's Society, which puts him in a good spot to spread the gospel on how to persist until you get an OSHASBA loan.

MRS. GORDON

MRS. PALMER

KINGSTON

A promotion and a reitrement concerning two women have been announced by Robert E. Deitrick, president of Hudson Valley Federal Savings and Loan Association.

Mrs. Kathleen M. Gordon of Woodstock has been appointed the new manager of Hudson Valley Federal Savings' Central Broadway Office. Until her appointment she was the office's assistant manager.

Mrs. Gordon joined Hudson Valley in 1968 at the Broadway office. She is a graduate of Rondout Valley High School, and has attended Ulster County Community College and the State University College at New Paltz. In addition, she has completed courses with the Institute ofr Financial Education.

Mrs. Julia Palmer, manager of the Central Broadway Office, since 1968, plans to retire in January. She joined Hudson Valley in 1964 as a teller, and was promoted to head teller at the Main Office in 1966. She was elected assistant secretary in 1969 and assistant vice president in 1971.

Commenting on her retirement, Deitrick said, "Hudson Valley Federal Savings is losing a dedicated highly competent, customer-oriented officer with Mrs. Palmer's retirement."

The House Store Shows All

MODNENA

The House Store, an unusual shopping place designed as a center where house hunters and those building a new home may find a generous sampling of materials making up the interior of a house, has been opened in Modena by Frank Monachelli of Santoro Lumber.

A unique concept in home building, the house Store is termed as an educational display for customers showing every step of the home under construction and is especially geared toward younger couples who have never purchased a house before.

Each detail of the house under construction is outlined for customers, and people in the market for a new house can view materials that go into a building's makeup such as a new type of floor truss, electrical system, plumbing and other construction details not readily visible to the buyers eye.

Working in conjunction with National Homes, oneof the largest home building companies in the nation, Monachelli agrees with th president of National Homes who recently said that the biggest challenge among builders today is being able to supply a basic house to a middle income family at a price they can afford

With the average selling price of a home in the $11,000 range, according to the National Builders Association the middle income family earning less than $15,000 per year would seem to have little chance of realizing a home of their own

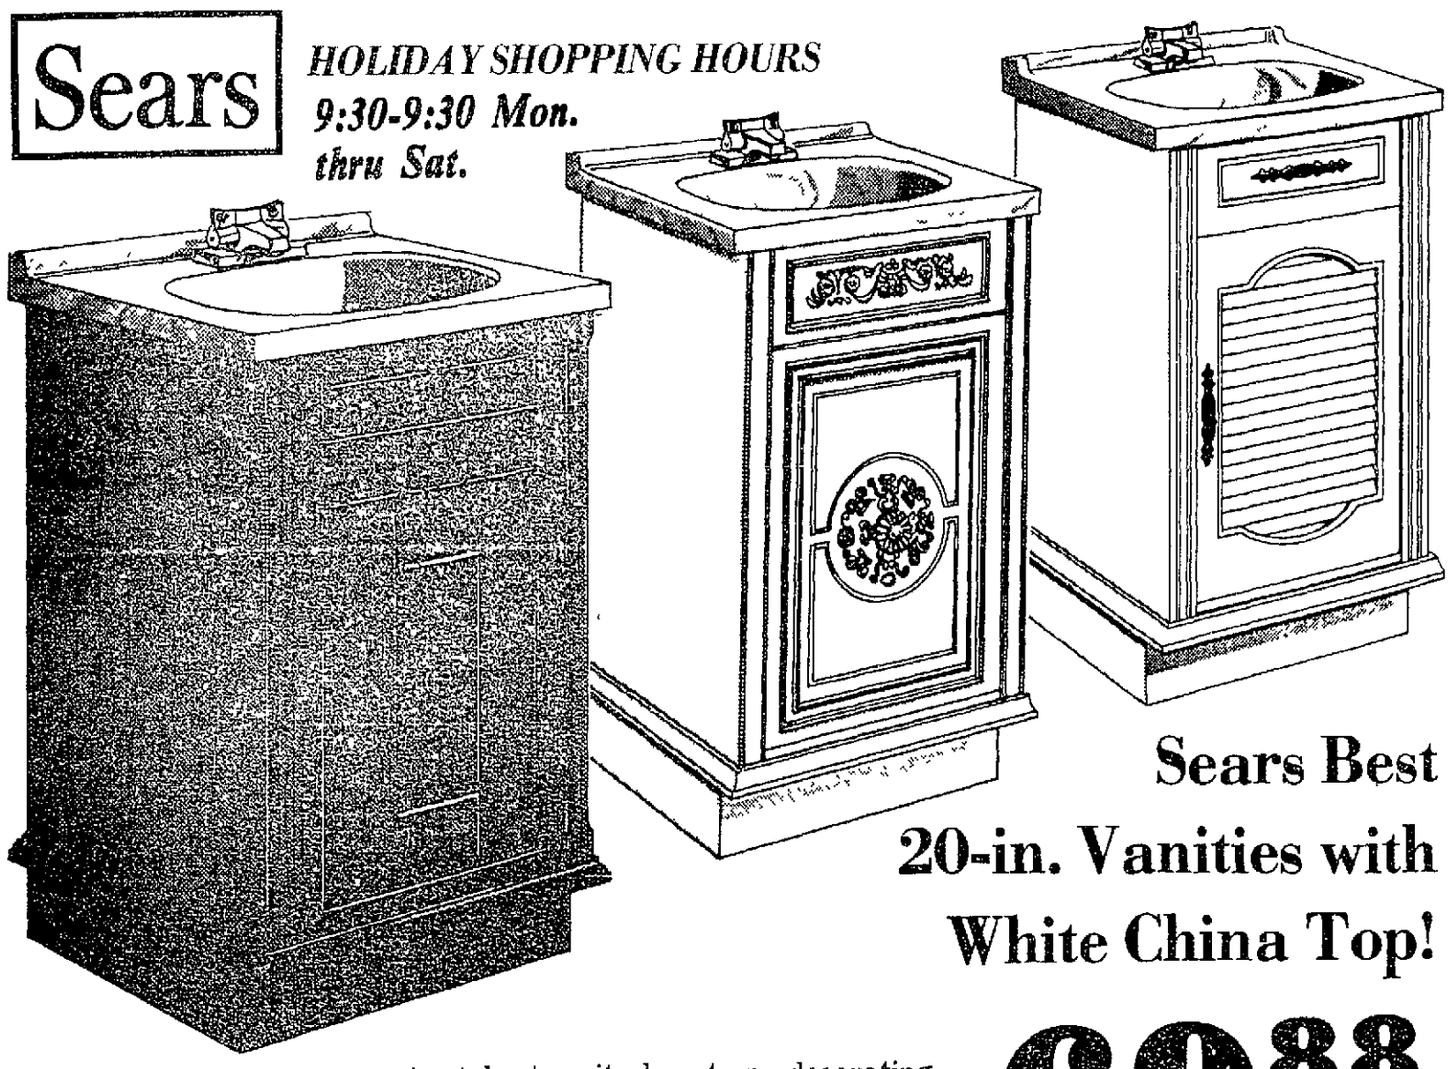

Details of a revised federal program now available to middle income families can be supplied by Monachelli, who will explain a plan for a three bedroom home with payments averaging about $70 per month based on a $2,... mortgage

A family with ... background may be able to qualify for the low interest government-subsidized mortgage plan if their adjusted income is $8500 or less

Owning Vintage Car Could Mean Small Fortune

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UPI) — Got a 1955 Thunderbird around, or a 1953-57 Corvette, or maybe even a Corvair Monza in good condition?

If you're lucky enough to have one of these cars, you might be sitting on a small fortune.

And if you're willing to invest about $5,000 in restoring one of these cars, you might get back almost double.

Bill Kinsman, the owner, operator and sole employe of "Kinsman's Carriage," is in the business of restoring vintage cars to factory-new standards, or maybe even a little better.

Right now, Kinsman is restoring a 1955 Thunderbird for Buffalo Sabres hockey player Rick Martin.

Kinsman admits most people lack the spending money a top professional athlete has, but says he can put a car into good shape for what many can afford.

He and Martin have taken Martin's Thunderbird completely apart. They are cleaning and sandblasting every piece. Kinsman expects they will have it ready early next year.

"This car right here is one of the most vintage collectible cars right now," he said. "Others are the very first series of Corvettes, from 1953 to 1957, and the Corvair is another excellent one."

Martin's car was purchased for about $2,000. When completed, Kinsman said, "it will be worth many times that."

"I'm going to drive it on nice days, but it will be stored most of the time" Martin said. "You'll be able to eat on it when he's finished."

The engine has already been torn down and rebuilt. When all the sandblasting is done, the car will be reassembled. Then it gets about 20 coats of paint. These include a plastic-based coat that provides special protection, Kinsman said.

Not all cars get that much work, he said.

"You can put anywhere from $3,500 to $15,000 into a car, depending on the size and involvement and the degree of quality you want," Kinsman said. He said it depended on "whether you want a show job or just something cleaned up — a street restoration."

The cost of the job hinges heavily on the condition of the car at the start.

"One like this that's in exceptional rustfree conditionn eliminates half the time, but you could easily put a thousand hours into one," Kinsman said.

The many cars Kinsman has restored in eight years in the business have included a Model A for which the owner put up $7,000.

"The owner sold it a short time later for $12,000," he said. "It made me sick."

Although Kinsman does a little body work on the side, his first love is restoration.

Kinsman got interested in cars largely because his father collected them. He worked in a body shop through high school. Later, he went to work for a local Pontiac dealer who sent him to the General Motors training school. There, he perfected his craft.

At his shop he starts work about 9 a.m. He finishes "about 7 to 9 in the evening, as well as all day Saturday, and throughout the winter I may come down on Sundays and do all the little finishing up things."

A collector of cars himself, he has an antique truck, a replica of a Cord and a 1955 Thunderbird which he gave to his wife as a wedding present when they were married a year ago.

Kinsman, who has won several prizes for his work, talks with particular pride of "a nice Model A roadster that has national status" which he restored and said he believed the Thunderbird would attain the same reputation.

The best cars, he said, come from California where they are not affected by salt put on the streets in northern cities.

Kinsman warned that would-be customers for his work might have to wait a while before he could get to them.

"It might take two years," he said. "I've already got two waiting now. I'm not bragging but you can expect to take at least two or three months and maybe up to a year to finish one."

Martin, no slouch himself at his trade, says Kinsman "is an artist."

"I swear to God he's a craftsman," Martin said. "When he gets into something it's got to be perfect or he doesn't do it."

Bonded Labor May End

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — Ram Phal had a debt he couldn't possibly repay. So he and his wife, Harbans, fled their village 12 years ago. He was 15. She was 10.

Until he fled, Ram Phal was trapped in the vice of bonded labor — a cruel legacy of Indian feudalism that has forced millions of poor peasants into slavery to pay their debts.

Ram Phal, a houseboy of the untouchable caste, inherited his bondage from his father, who died a pauper with a debt unpaid.

"My father had borrowed 200 rupees ($26) from his landlord for my wedding expenses," Ram Phal said. "The interest rate was 50 per cent."

"He bonded his labor to the landlord and ppedged my labor also in case he died with the loan unpaid."

"My father worked for three years and in return got a morsel of food every day. When he died not a rupee was paid back and the loan had increased to 350 rupees.

"I guessed there was not a chance of repaying the loan, and I might have had to work free for how many years I did not know. So I and my wife fled the village one night and trekked to New Delhi," he said.

Bonded labor is most prevalent in the villages, where 80 per cent of India's 600 million psople dwell.

The victims of the system are mostly simple tribesmen or landless untouchables. They incur debts to pay for the weddings of their sons and daughters or for the celebration of religious festivals. The interest rates are exhorbitant.

According to studies by social scientists, the begar system has forced wives and daughters into brothels and ensured the slavery of babies, still in the womb.

"Bonded labor is the most horrendous form of human exploitation," a study by the Indian Institute of Social Sciences said discussing the case of a tribe of Indian hill men who sold 45 women into prostituion in 1969 to pay their debts.

Of 41 bonded workers interviewed in another survey, nine had worked for more than 10 years to pay off debts, one for 19 years and another for 30 years.

A $7 debt forced one man and his family into bondage for 22 years, the survey said.

But now a new federal ordinance may give bonded laborers a way out and end the centuries-old form of slavery forever. Only time will tell if it works.

Last Oct. 24, a presidential ordinance abolished bonded labor, canceled the debts of bonded laborers, promised to return property confiscated by greedy landlords and money lenders and ordered the rele ase of all bonded workers jailed for failure to pay their debts.

Owning Vintage Car Could Mean Small Fortune

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UPI) — Got a 1955 Thunderbird around, or a 1953-57 Corvette, or maybe even a Corvair Monza in good condition?

If you're lucky enough to have one of these cars, you might be sitting on a small fortune.

And if you're willing to invest about $5,000 in restoring one of these cars, you might get back almost double.

Bill Kinsman, the owner, operator and sole employe of "Kinsman's Carriage," is in the business of restoring vintage cars to factory-new standards, or maybe even a little better.

Right now, Kinsman is restoring a 1955 Thunderbird for Buffalo Sabres hockey player Rick Martin.

Kinsman admits most people lack the spending money a top professional athlete has, but says he can put a car into good shape for what many can afford.

He and Martin have taken Martin's Thunderbird completely apart. They are cleaning and sandblasting every piece. Kinsman expects they will have it ready early next year.

"This car right here is one of the most vintage collectible cars right now," he said. "Others are the very first series of Corvettes, from 1953 to 1957, and the Corvair is another excellent one."

Martin's car was purchased for about $2,000. When completed, Kinsman said, "it will be worth many times that."

"I'm going to drive it on nice days, but it will be stored most of the time" Martin said. "You'll be able to eat on it when he's finished."

The engine has already been torn down and rebuilt. When all the sandblasting is done, the car will be reassembled. Then it gets about 20 coats of paint. These include a plastic-based coat that provides special protection, Kinsman said.

Not all cars get that much work, he said.

"You can put anywhere from $3,500 to $15,000 into a car, depending on the size and involvement and the degree of quality you want," Kinsman said. He said it depended on "whether you want a show job or just something cleaned up — a street restoration."

The cost of the job hinges heavily on the condition of the car at the start.

"One like this that's in exceptional rustfree conditionn eliminates half the time, but you could easily put a thousand hours into one," Kinsman said.

The many cars Kinsman has restored in eight years in the business have included a Model A for which the owner put up $7,000.

"The owner sold it a short time later for $12,000," he said. "It made me sick."

Although Kinsman does a little body work on the side, his first love is restoration.

Massed Choir 'Messiah' on Dec. 7, Offering to Children's Library Fund

KINGSTON

The Christmas portions of Handel's "Messiah," sung by the Kingston area massed choir will not only be an outstanding musical treat of this pre-holiday season but an opportunity as well for music lovers to help a good cause.

Of course, there will be no charge for admission to this fine concert scheduled for Sunday, December 7, at Fair Street Reformed Church.

However, an offering will be received and the proceeds will be added to the city-wide fund-raising campaign to help the Children's Library get back on its feet.

Announcement of this move to help the special library fund was made by Percy W. Gazlay II, minister of music at Fair Street Reformed Church, who will conduct the massed choir in Handel's "Messiah."

The recent fire at the Children's Library destroyed not only the building but many of the books and materials that were stored there.

Representatives from between 17 to 20 churches in the Greater Kingston Area will comprise the massed choir in the December 7 presentation. During a Candlelight Vesper hour at 4 o'clock.

Soloists participating will include Betty Lindsay, soprano; Geraldine Nathan, contralto; John McCullough, tenor and J. Paul Whitten, bass, all well-known local artists.

A thumb-nail sketch of the soloists follows:

Betty Lindsay, a resident of Wurtsboro, is well known locally for her musical talents with Fair Street Church and the Coach House Players. In addition, she has offered her musical talents to her own church, the Wurtsboro Methodist as well as the Reformed Dutch Church of Mamakating and the fire company for its community sing. She also works with the Boy Scouts for Dramatic and horsemanship badges.

Geraldine Nathan, a student of Leonard Stine, also is an active member of Fair Street Church, a member of its senior choir and is presently serving as president of the Women's Guild. Mrs. Nathan, a nurse at the J. Watson Bailey Junior High School, is presently serving as the first vice-president of the Southeastern Zone School Nurse Teachers Association. She and her husband, a local attorney, reside with their family in Kingston.

John A. McCullough, president of the Community Concert Association, sings with the Mendelssohn Club and has sung with choirs and as soloist for several local churches and is presently with St. James Methodist Church choir. McCullough, an architect, also has appeared in various other functions, including the Kiwanis Kapers. Both he and his wife, Grace, are active in co6munity affairs.

J. Paul Whitten, a member of Fair Street Reformed Church choir, has studied voice at Potsdam and was director of choirs for both the Rosendale and Marbletown Reformed Churches and for several years directed the Lyric Choristers. His daughter, Gigi, who is only 14 years old, is presently serving as organist for the Rochester Reformed Church.

Organ accompaniment will be provided by Gloria-Jean Sparks, organist at Fair Street Reformed Church.

The massed choir effort in the Greater Kingston Area has been a four-year program, providing an opportunity for singers to participate in a large choral works, considered beyond the scope of the average size church choir.

LIFE TODAY

"Wow," said feminist Kate Millett, author of the movement's new bible, "Sexual Politics," . . . we really have a movement now."

KAREN DECROW (L), GLORIA STEINEM

The Women's Movement . . . A Progress Report

NEW YORK — (NEA) — Six years ago, thousands of women thronged streets throughout the country to commemorate the 50th anniversary of women's right to vote. In New York, the event was celebrated by a jubilant march down Fifth Avenue culminating in a mass demonstration in Bryant Park behind the Public Library.

"Wow," said feminist Kate Millete, author of the movement's new bible, "Sexual Politics," "we really have a movement now."

Where is that movement today?

There have been notable advances (ERA, abortion) as well as major setbacks.

The Equal Rights amendment, a target issue, still remains unratified. The national day care centers bill, passed by Congress, suffered presidential veto and lies dormant. Women's right to abortion on demand, while confirmed by the United States Supreme Court, is being attacked in many ways in various parts of the country. Because of the recession, many jobs recently gained by women have been lost because of seniority rules.

And this summer at Mexico City, the much hailed International Women's Conference sponsored by the United Nations, degenerated into a political forum.

Back home, there have been signs of open rifts between segments of the movement. One group, the Red Stockings, whose founding manifesto emphasized "sisterhood," issued a wordy document attacking editor and writer Gloria Steinem as "purported CIA agent."

In addition, the year has seen the growth of several national women's organizations dedicated to "teaching the art of pleasing the man in happy subservience."

Despite these losses, feminist leaders remain optimistic about the movement now and its future citing widespread acceptance and growth at the grass roots.

"You can compre the movement today to a kid who shoots up like a bean pole and then takes time filling out," noted one observer.

"We're going into Phase II," said Audrey Colom, president of the National Women's Political Caucus. "The era of confrontation is passing. We're moving to the nuts and bolts technical politics. It's not so dramatic but this is how we are going to win the power. We're digging in for the long haul, learning that success in business or politics depends on a well-developed game plan. Shirleys (Chisholm) and Bellas (Abzug) don't just happen."

The years have seen legislative gains in many areas. Domestic workers are now included in minimum wage legislation. In education, Title 9 prohibits discrimination — and discriminatory attitudes. The New York State Department of Education issued guidelines for a whole new educational system which bans sexism in everything from books to teacher attitudes. A presidential order prohibits job discrimination on the part of federal contractors. Rape bills, guarding the rights of victims, now exist in several states and are top priority in others. In California, in a recent decision, the judge is now prohibited from a traditional charge to the jury, "Rape is easily charged and hard to defend." In New York City, women have a special number to call and sympathetic officers to help them.

Increasing numbers of women are engaged in top level research at universities. In academia and elsewhere, distorted Victorian concepts of the female, which influenced scientists such as Freud and Darwin, are being discarded. Data revealing role sharing in animal societies is being unearthed and publicized. "Women are discovering once buried research," says Elizabeth Fisher, editor of "Aphra," feminist literary publication, who is now writing a historical book on women. "Many anthropologists have had to retract earlier positions regarding male dominance."

The changes in our language itself indicate the pervasive nature of the movement, she added. "Ms," "person," "MCP," "sexist," she observed, are all words now in common use.

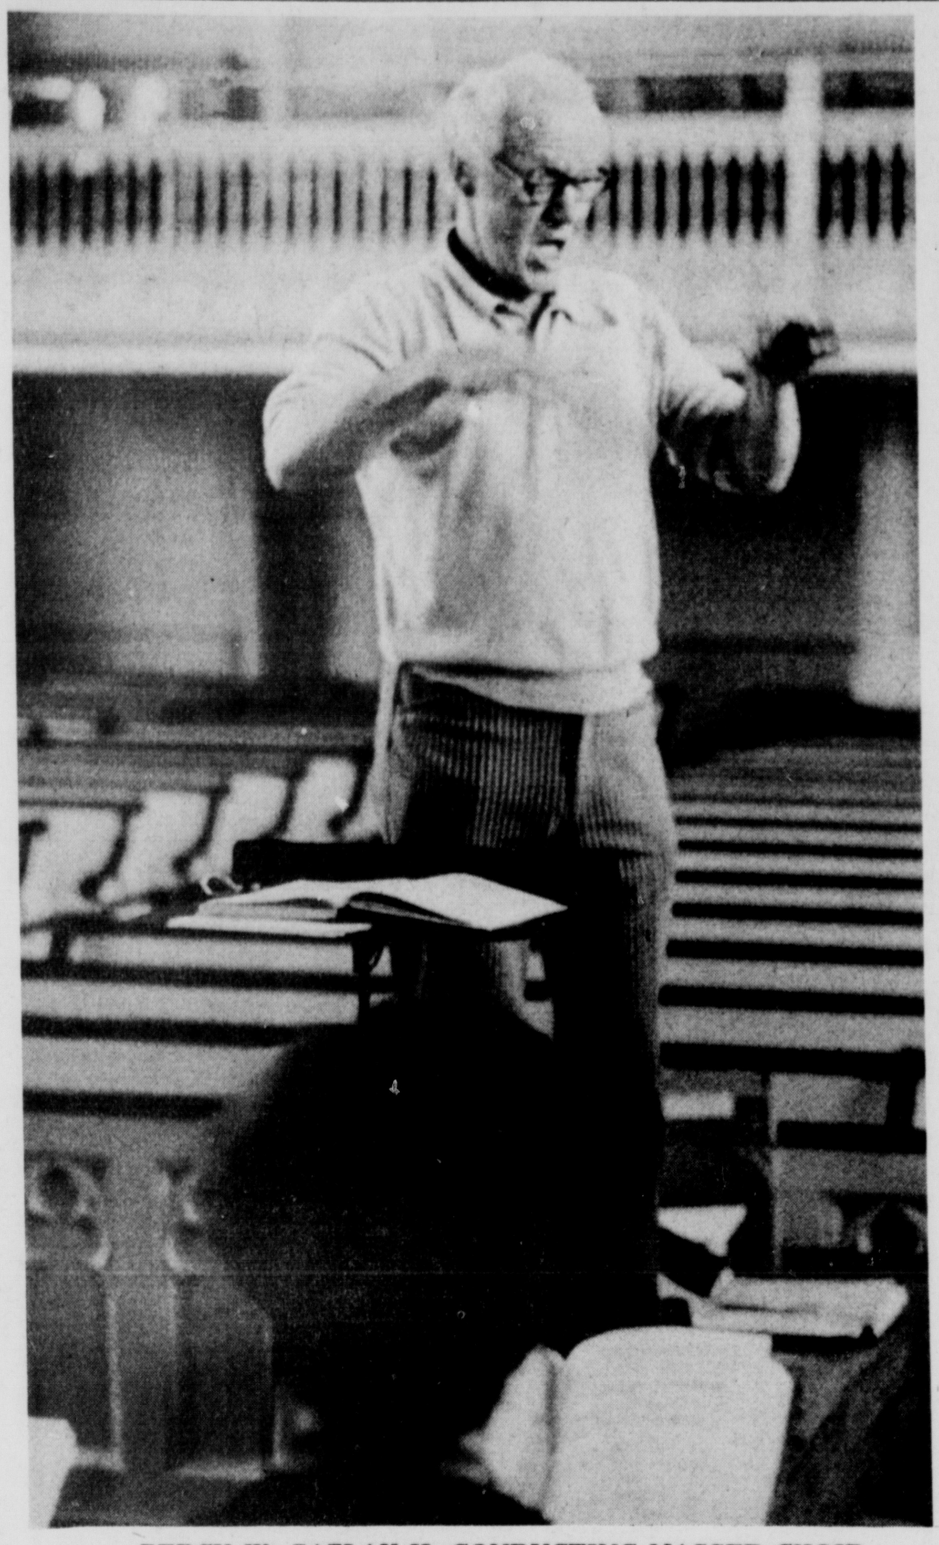

What of the future — and today's problems? Nobody expects the millenium overnight, a sign of the movement's new maturity.

"So, Mexico City was a disaster," said Karen DeCrow, NOW president. "It was a start. You can't expect people to shift gears instantaneously. Sexism has been going for 6,000 years."

A MARKET PLACE FROM AFAR

For Auditorium Bazaar on Dec. 7-8

Public Market Place Hadassah Theme

KINGSTON

Bazaars have been traced from Persia to Arabia on to Turkey and North Africa. These market places were always the location for lots of activities.

In India, the market place found a home in a single shop and even today the term, "bazaar" can mean both a single shop or concession selling miscellaneous articles. It can also mean a fair at which many things are sold for charity.

Hadassah of Kingston is going to try its hand at staging a bazaar. Chairlady and co-chairlady will be Anne Breuer, Hadassah president and Bernice Halpern. It will be housed in a separate quarter of the town, municipal auditorium, and, like in the traditional folk tales of The Thousand and One Nights, it will boast many interesting booths and wares

Hadassah's president told the Freeman, "It's going to be old-fashioned enjoyment in one area It's a very new and different type of project for Hadassah but we felt it was a nice way of raising funds and giving people an opportunity to get gifts at nominal prices."

Mrs. Breuer discussed bazaars and fairs of old. She told the Freeman that in smaller towns the bazaar consisted of a singe narrow street of stalls. In larger cities, such as Istanbul, it consists of many miles of such streets or passageways She said:

"Some bazaars, such as those built at Kashan and Isfahan (in Iran) in the 17th Century, were designed with great architectural integrity. They were usually roofed for protection against the hot desert sun, either with a single roof, with individual vaulted cupolas or domes, or with awnings.

"The Hadassah bazaar may not feature all these trappings from days gone by, but it will be colorful and interesting," Mrs. Breuer said.

LIFE Checked further on bazaars and found that in Russia, fairs are held on frozen rivers. Stalls are set up everywhere with such saleable items as nuts, hot blintzes with cream and fish pies. Men ander about with performing monkeys, others with charmankas (barrel organs) while others recite the old epic ballads and all of them compete to attract the attention of the crowds.

For Good Purpose And Fun

Bazaars are fun and serve a good purpose not only for raising funds but for fostering a fun atmosphere Kingston Hadassah's bazaar (fair) will feature candy, used clothes, rummage sales and many miscellaneous items.

Hadassah's event will be held Sunday, Dec. 7, from 1-9 p m. and Monday, Dec 8, from 10 a.m. to 1 p m.

Among those serving on the committee will be New and Nearly New Shop — Lillian Goldberg, chairman, Ceil Lipgar, co-chairlady and Bessie Ellenbogen; Plant Booth, Beverly Shaymow, chairlady; New Merchandise Booth, Elaine Morrison; Cake Booth, Peggy Schlossberg, Casseroles (Take home a dinner booth) Minnia Johnson, Children's Theatre, Joy Pitterman; Book Booth, Ira and Blanche Singer, Linens, Debbie Kalish, Refreshments, Lee Markoe and Bea Goldberg, Visual Aids — Mary Boyd.

Anyone interested in exhibiting arts and crafts should contact Anne Breuer or Bernice Halpern for detailed information

Fashions on Parade . . . For Ulster Academy Event

KINGSTON

Kingstonians are in for a special treat at the luncheon-fashion show sponsored by Ulster Academy to be held Wednesday, Dec. 3, at 12:30 p.m., in the Crystal Room at the Governor Clinton Hotel.

Ms. Bonnie Perlmutter and Ms. Maxine Goodheim, agents for Fashiontime Models and coordinators of the show, have gone to great lengths to indeed make it a worthwhile luncheon to attend.

"Holiday Fashions on Parade," which is the theme of the show, will feature outstanding and exciting fashions for the holidays, from Wallace's Department Store, Ulster Shopping Plaza; Lady Bug Fashion Gallery, Henry Street; Yallum's, Wall Street; Silks & Tweeds Minus Twenty, North Front Street; all of Kingston and Parwanis East, Tinker Street, Woodstock. To add to the festive touch, the glamorous furs from Sterly Furs, Wall Street, Kingston, also will be professionally modeled along with the clothes by Ms. Carol Matthews, Ms. Linda Gleason, Ms. Margrit Salomone, Ms. Virginia Tobiassen and Ms. Maxine Goodheim.

As an added attraction, Michelle Wood, Jamie McCloskey, Noelle Poellet, Nancy Modjeska and Kim Feltham, Ulster Academy students, will be wearing some of the "In" clothes, that only one can find at Parwanis East.

Ms. Janet Modjeska, chairperson of the luncheon, indicated that tickets may be purchased from Ulster Academy, Route 32, Kingston, Ms. Yvonne Rivelli, Woodstock, or from any Ulster Academy Parents.

Cratchit Clan

Hal Marsh (C), playing the role of Bob Cratchit, with his "family" — Yael Bloom as Elsie, Jennie O'Connel as Tiny Tim and Nathan Roper as Harry. In second row are Martha Price, portraying Martha; Marsh and Julie Isaacson, as Mrs. Cratchit.

Checking

Checking the lines are Judy Kudzin, assistant director and Robert Grosshans, director of "Mr. Scrooge." Judy also plays Mrs. Fezziwig in the production.

Mr. Scrooge '90 Miles Away' . . . Paltz Theater Offering

NEW PALTZ

"Charity Night," will highlight the opening of 90 Miles off Broadway's production of "Mr. Scrooge," on December 4.

The New Paltz theatre group is offering this unique evening as a holiday gift to its community, a night when all proceeds from ticket sales, will be directed toward various charitable organizations. The audience member wil l simply tell the box office where to contribute his or her ticket money.

A musical adaptation of Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol," "Mr. Scrooge," is the classic fable about Ebenezer Scrooge's incredible overnight conversion from a miser to generous humanitarian. Having spent a wretched, greedy life as partner in as investment brokerage, Scrooge is confronted in his rooms by the ghost of his dead business companion, Marley, who is te first to warn him to change his ways. Then follow the ghosts of Scrooge's Christmas Past, Present, and Future, with a parade to images to convince the skeptical Scrooge that there are benefits other than monetary, in being kind to one's fellow men.

Robert Grosshans is directing "Mr. Scrooge," his first show with 90 Miles, since "The Night of January 16," three years ago. Grosshans has been active as a director of both college and community theatre productions, with shows such as "Come Back, Little Sheba," "Most Happy Fella," and "You Can't Take it With You." Part of his experience has also included summer stock in the Catskills, and in theater in Utah, Nebraska, and Wyoming, as well as East Africa.

Audrey Gardner is musical director, and Maxine Bacon is choreographer for "Mr. Scrooge." John Price is featured in the title role, his first acting role since directing "Finian's Rainbow," last Spring. Other faces familiar to 90 miles audiences must include Pat Yaeger as Mrs. Dilber, Hal Marsh as Bob Cratchit, Julie Isaacson as Mrs. Cratchit, Steve Ford as the Ghost of Christmas Present and Leni Heroy as the Ghost of Christmas Future.

Production dates are the evenings of December 4, 5, and 6, at 8:30 p.m., with a 2 p.m. matinee on Sunday, Dec. 7.

JOHN PRICE AS SCROOGE

The play will be at New Paltz High School: tickets may be purchased at the door, or ahead of time at the 90 Miles box office, The Little Red House of Gifts.

There will be special prices for senior citizens, children, students and groups of 20 or more.

Area Harvard-Radcliffe Club Sets Fall Meeting

POUGHKEEPSIE

The Harvard-Radcliffe Club of the Mid-Hudson Valley will hold its annual fall meeting at the Vassar Alumnae House Wednesday night, Dec. 3. The meeting will be preceded by dinner at 7:15 p.m. with cocktails served at 6:30 p.m. Anyone in the area who attended Radcliffe or Harvard University is invited to attend.

Two representatives of the university will address the club — Ms. Kathryn C. Chisholm of the Alumni office and Ms. Laura Gordon Fisher.

Ms. Fisher will speak on "The House System a Perspective from the River." Ms. Fisher is Allston Burr Senior Tuto in Eliot House. She has been executive assistant to the Master, Eliot House and director of Admissions, Summer School. Ms. Fisher received an A.B. from Smith College in Russian Civilization, an A.M. and Ph.D. from Harvard in Slavic Languages and Literatures. She has given numerous courses at the university in both Russian and Serbo-Croatian Literature, along with language instruction in Serbo-Croation.

Ms. Fisher is a member of the Administrative Board of Harvard and Radcliffe Colleges, the Faculty Theatre Committee, the Signet Society and the Committee of Radcliffe College Trustees on Student Activities.

Reservations may be made by contacting eiher Louise Sullivan or Marshall Effron.

Mrs. Rapp Heads County GOP Women

Officers were elected at a recent meeting of Ulster County Women's Republican Club. Heading the group for the coming year are Mrs. James Rapp, president; Rita Senor, first vice president; Alice Tipp, second vice president; Irene Callahan, third vice president; Eleanor Bruhn, fourth vice president; Pamela Foehser, corresponding secretary; Marge Tompkins, recording secretary; Frances Turck, treasurer.

Plans were formulated for the annual Christmas party and installation of officers on Dec. 17 at Governor Clinton Hotel at 8 p.m. Members and guests are invited. Reservations may be made by contacting Kay Rapp or any member of the Club.

GARNER: It's 'Misty' everywhere.

Goldie Hawn Tries a Hudson

By ROBIN ADAMS SLOAN

Q: My favorite actress is Goldie Hawn. I met her in Colorado earlier this year where she was making a film and she seemed so nice. Is she married or living with anyone? — R.L., Denver, Colo., A: Goldie's marriage to Gus Trikonis has ended but she is very involved with Bill Hudson of the popular Hudson Brothers.

QUESTION YOU NEVER ASKED: What song has hit the charts 12 different times in varying renditions since it was written 21 years ago? Erroll Garner's "Misty" is the song. The writer just got another award from ASCAP for the Ray Stevens' country-western rendition of this classic.

Q: I think the idea of a father and daughter making a movie is kind of strange and wondered how Liza Minnelli and her dad are doing? — E. H., Grahamsville, N.Y.

A: The movie is off to a shaky start in Rome and everybody says that's because Vincente Minnelli hasn't done a movie in several years and Liza is a pro and maybe the production problems will sort themselves out.

Gossip Beat

Q: Does Truman Capote care that nobody in High Scoiety is ever going to speak to him again after his incredible revelations in his book fragment, "Answered Prayers"?—X.T., N.Y., N.Y.

A: Word drifts our way from the West Coast, where Truman is acting in a movie, that the writer is now getting pretty nervous over the adverse, indeed outraged, reaction of many of his suddenly ex-best friends among the Beautiful People.

Q: I hear there's a book that has Hollywood big shots all upset. Do you know what it is, and why? — J. X., Teaneck, N.J.

A: Film industry insiders say that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences is very unhappy about the behind-the-scenes segment in Irving Wallace's new "The People's Almanac," written with son David Wallechinsky. The Oscar chapter names names and tells the inside story on how and why each Oscar-winner won (—and who REALLY should have won) from 1927 right through last year.

Q: Is American style football catching on in other countries?—Y.O., Pine Bluff, Ark.

A: There is some stirring of interest reported from Europe and Japan but changing the sports habits of a nation is slow going. However, British Airways is touting the spectacle of American professional football as one of the wonders of the United States in an effort to entice English tourists to fly over for a visit.

Versatile Recipe for the Holiday

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. The joyous holiday season is almost here. Soon holly wreaths will be hung on doors, Christmas trees will glisten with tinsel and ornaments, and Santa will pay his annual visit. This is the season for parties and merrymaking, for feasting and baking.

But how do you bake all those Christmas goodies and still have the time and energy to enjoy the holiday season yourself? It's a perennial problem — but this Raisin Bonanza Batter can help.

It's easy and so versatile! From one recipe you can make cake or cookies, steamed pudding or an aged fruitcake. Double the batch and you've got two treats — one to keep and the other to give as a nice gift.

Raisins are basic in your holiday baked goods, but don't limit them to Christmas foods only. They can be stored and used later in salads, sauces and desserts — or they're great just for snacking.

Keep raisins in a sealed container and a cool place. If properly stored they will keep their color, flavor and nutritional value up to 15 months. Raisins also freeze well.

Raisin Bonanza Batter

2 cups flour
1 cup sugar
1 tablespoon cornstarch
3 tablespoons cocoa
2 teaspoons baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon each cloves and nutmeg
1½ cups raisins
¼ cup chopped walnuts
1 tablespoon grated orange peel (optional)
2 eggs
1½ cups unsweetened applesauce (15-ounce jar)
½ cup cooking oil

Sift dry ingredients (9) into largemixing bowl. Blend in raisins, nuts and peel. Add remaining ingredients; then beat just until smooth. Pour into greased and floured 10-inch bundt or tube pan. Bake in preheated 350 degree oven 30 minutes. Reduce heat to 300 degrees and bake 20 to 25 minutes more, or until cake tests done. Cool in pan 10 minutes. Invert onto cake rack and cool completely. Before cutting, sprinkle with powdered sugar, if desired.

Makes 1 large cake, 10 to 12 servings.

Variations follow:

Bar Cookies: Spread batter in greased 13x9-inch cake pan. Bake 20 to 25 minutes. Cool slightly before cutting. Makes about 3 dozen bars (approximately 2x3 inches.)

Aged Fruitcake: Brush surface of warm cake with 2 tablespoons brandy. Wrap in cheesecloth, then in foil. Let stand at room temperature 24 hours. Store in refrigerator or freezer until needed, repeating the brandying process each week, if desired.

Steamed Pudding: Wrap cake in foil. Place in steamer on rack over boiling water. Steam 20 minutes. Serve hot, with brandy sauce or hard sauce. (This especially appropriate if part of cake becomes stale.)

Scholarship Winners to Attend RV Event

KYSERIKE — Winners of 1975 scholarships will attend as guests when the Rondout Valley Scholarship Fund Inc. holds its yearly dinner-dance Saturday, Dec. 6, at the Williams Lake Hotel in Rosendale.

Festivities begin with a Dutch treat cocktail hour at 6:30 p.m., followed by a prime ribs of beef dinner and dancing.

Scholarship winners invited to attend as guests of the fund are Jenifer Barthel, Holly Davis, Amy Schliftman, Christal Seaman and Cathy Highland, winner of a new vocational scholarship awarded for the first time this year by Walter Davenport Sons.

The fund has been awarding scholarships annually to qualified Rondout Valley High School graduates for well over a decade, the only community-wide group engaged in this work. The organization depends entirely on voluntary contributions and this one single major fund-raising event.

The board of directors asks that persons unable to attend consider making a donation. Both dinner tickets and donations are tax-deductible.

To obtain tickets, contact dinner-dance committee members Mrs. Esther Denkensohn, Mrs. Anna Mae Emmerling, Mrs. Ann Morgan or Mrs. Savina Pagel.

WIN AT BRIDGE

South breaks communications

By Oswald & James Jacoby

Some bridge hands are so simple that the correct bidding and play stand out. Yet bridge players go wrong for one reason or another.

South has a normal notrump opening bid and North a normal raise to game. There is no reason to waste time with his diamond suit. He has no singleton and should try for the nine trick game.

West leads the six of spades. East produces the king and it is up to South to let that king hold the trick. South is giving up a potential trick with the jack of spades but he has no need of that trick.

What he has need of are four tricks in the diamond suit. He may collect five, but he doesn't need them. Four diamonds plus one spade, two hearts and two clubs make a total of nine and South has bid to take nine.

South ducks the king of spades, plays his jack when the spade is led back and takes his ace when the third spade is led. Then he leads the queen of idamonds and lets it ride. East takes his king and can't lead a spade so South scores game and rubber.

Fall Music Festival . . . Evening of Variety

KINGSTON — Variety is the theme of the Mendelssohn Club's Fall Music Festival to be presented Sunday night, Dec. 14, at the J. Watson Bailey Auditorium.

The glee club's program of 14 selections offers plenty of contrast ranging from serious to fanciful. The extremes of musical idiom are probably best represented by Hayden's "The Heavens Are Telling" and a bang-up barbershop version of "Jingle Bells," although there are at least three other contenders for the most fanciful tune on the program.

Of special interest is an exquisite old French carol entitled "I Sing Of A Maiden" with an incidental solo for alto voice to be sung by special guest Margaret Roosa. Ms. Roosa, a well-known area soloist, will assist the glee club in other selections as well.

Guest soloists for the occasion are four exceptionally talented young music students who will be featured in "cameo" recitals in their individual fields of study and achievement. It all adds up to a light and enjoyable evening of a great variety of music and performers.

A nominal admission charge will be made at the door or tickets may be purchased in advance from Abrams Music Store or from any member of the Mendelssohn Club.

The concert will start promptly at 7:30 p.m.

On Treating Wood For Outdoor Life

KINGSTON

With the high cost of building materials and the need to conserve resources, it is important for homeowners and others using wood for outdoor construction to treat it for longer life. Professor E.W. Foss of the New York State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Cornell has some important information on how to add years to outdoor construction.

Relatively few woods have high resistance to decay and when continuously exposed to the weather or wet conditions. For the homeowner interested in using wood for fences, patio furniture, docks for a boat or other outdoor uses, care is needed in selecting a proper wood or wood treatment.

About the only woods with high decay resistance available at a building supply dealer are "redwood" from California, western cedar, and sometimes cypress from the south. All three are relatively expensive in the Northeast.

Cedar is commonly used for both interior and exterior siding for buildings. Redwood is more commonly used for outdoor furniture and fencing. Cypress is somewhat heavier, less commonly available, but is useful for many purposes where strength, appearance, and decay resistance is desired. Native cedar, locust, and white oak are about the only native woods with fairly high resistance to rot and weathering.

Where outdoor steps, boat docks, and unroofed structures are needed, pressure treated (with wood preservative) lumber is usually the best buy. Generally, pressure-treated western fir or southern pine in common sizes such as 2x4, 2x6, etc., are available at the larger building supply dealers. Southern pine is heavier than western lumber, is stronger, and can be identified by its very prominent light and dark graining.

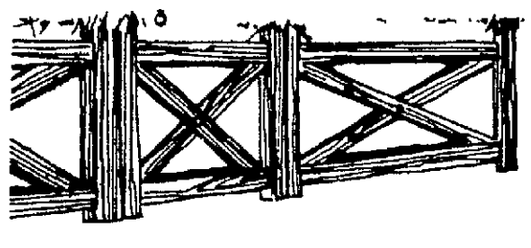

Agricultural Report: By Willial H. Palmer

Several types of wood preservatives are used by different lumber treatment firms, and there are also varying methods of applying pressure treatment.

Unfortunately, failure to provide a vacuum as the final stage of treatment — particularly when "creosote" is used, leaves the lumber with a very oil y surface. Such a surface is slippery during the first year of use, will tend to burn your skin, and will stain your clothes . It is recommended only for fence posts, utility poles, and walks or stairs where shoes are always worn. Care must be used when walking on these surfaces during the first few months.

Another very common preservative material is "Penta" — really Pentachlorophenol. This material is also irritating to some people's skin and should not be used on wood for table tops or chairs. Another material commonly used for structural lumber is copper napthanate (has a greenish color).

While these chemicals are usually available to be painted on the lumber or for lumber or posts to be sprayed or dipped into it, the small amount of material so applied is not a "permanent" treatment. Pressure treated material will usually last for 20 years or more, but a sprayed or painted application will add but a few years to the normal life of exposed woods.

When using wood exposed to weather, additional years of service are obtained by using either resistant wood varieties or preservative treated woods.

A Big Reversal In Plans

By Charles Gaudet

PROVIDENCE, R.I.

Design changes just for the sake of being different seldom produce anything worthwhile, but when the deviation from traditional results in positive improvement, it is all well justified.

A perfect example of the latter is given in today's ranchhouse fashioned by the Associated Architects. Complete building plans of the "Dreyer" are available to readers at the moderate cost of $28 for the first set and $12 for each additional set, with or without basement, by writing to the Associated Blueprint Co., 595 Plainfield Street, Providence, R.I., 02909 Also available are plan booklets for 50 cents each and a new booklet of past newspaper features for $1.25

Roof's Appearance Reflects Home

You're not supposed to "judge a book by its cover," but that isn't such bad advice if you apply it to the roof of a home you are interested in buying.

As the largest unbroken exterior area, the appearance and condition of the roof can make a house the "envy or despair" of the neighborhood. Since a roof tends to wear uniformly, even the the best roofing materials eventually succumb to "old age."

The worst enemy of roofing is the sun, which causes the shingles to dry out. Signs of a badly weathered roof are brittle, faded, cracked, curled or missing shingles. The best method for discovering whether the roof is due for an "overhaul" is to determine its age. A roof of standard shingles is probably ready to be replaced if it's 15 years old or older.

If a worn out roof is the only drawback to a house that is otherwise sound and meets your family's needs, you might be able to convince the owner to deduct the cost of a new roof from the price of the house. Before going ahead with a reroofing job however, the Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association recommends an on the roof inspection by a professional roofer.

A professional roofer can offer advice and suggestions regarding the use of color and texture He can also provide a realistic estimate of the cost of reroofing, based on your choice of roofing material and its design life in years.

Heavy-textured asphalt shingles, for example, are designed to last up to 25 years, but require only minimal maintenance These shingles come in a wide range of colors, including popular earthtone shades that serve to relate a home to its environment. In many cases, asphalt shingles can be applied over the old roofing, eliminating the cost of a tear off.

Since the labor cost of installing the longer lasting, heavy-textured shingle is more economical because the cost of materials and labor is amortized over a longer period of time. An estimate of the probable annual cost of a new roof is made possible by adding the cost of labor and materials and dividing the result by the shingle's design life.

Another factor to be considered when deciding whether to purchase a house is its overall design, which should be attractive, comfortable and practical.

It's also a good idea to check the home site for drainage, the condition of the lawn and shrubbery and whether the house is situated correctly on the lot. Inspect the walls, both indoors and out, for cracks the windows for snug closure, the basement for dryness and the plumbing and the heating equipment.

Finally, look over the rooms to be sure they provide adequate space when furnished and that there are enough closets with ample storage space.

Does Your Water Pass Quality Test?

CHICAGO, Ill.

Although American plumbing is undoubtedly the best in the world, the water you get from your faucets isn't necessarily always "quality" water

According to the Water Quality Information Bureau, about 85 per cent of U.S. homes have water that either needs softening or the removal of objectionable tastes, odors or suspended particles.

These are the main requirements for quality water in the home, the Bureau notes.

It must be safe, clean and esthetically appealing

It must be non-staining and non-corrosive to prevent costly damage to laundered fabrics, plumbing fixtures and pipe

For drinking and food preparation, it must taste good.

For personal grooming, skin care, laundering, dishwashing and general cleaning, it must be soft.

The most common water problem is hardness. The solution is a softener that treats the water before it enters the piping system. The modern softener is easily installed and is almost maintenance-free For free information on how to solve hardness and other water problems, write to the Water Quality Information Bureau, 35 E Wacker Dr , Chicago, Ill. 60601

Tips On Snow Throwers

You can clear yourself a path to safety in the snow if you know how to use snow removal equipment properly. Here are some tips from experts at the Outdoor Power Equipment Institute on getting the best out of your snow thrower.

• Even if your machine is not new and you've had it for several years, reread the owner's manual to make sure you are familiar with the controls so you can stop quickly, naneuver skillfully.

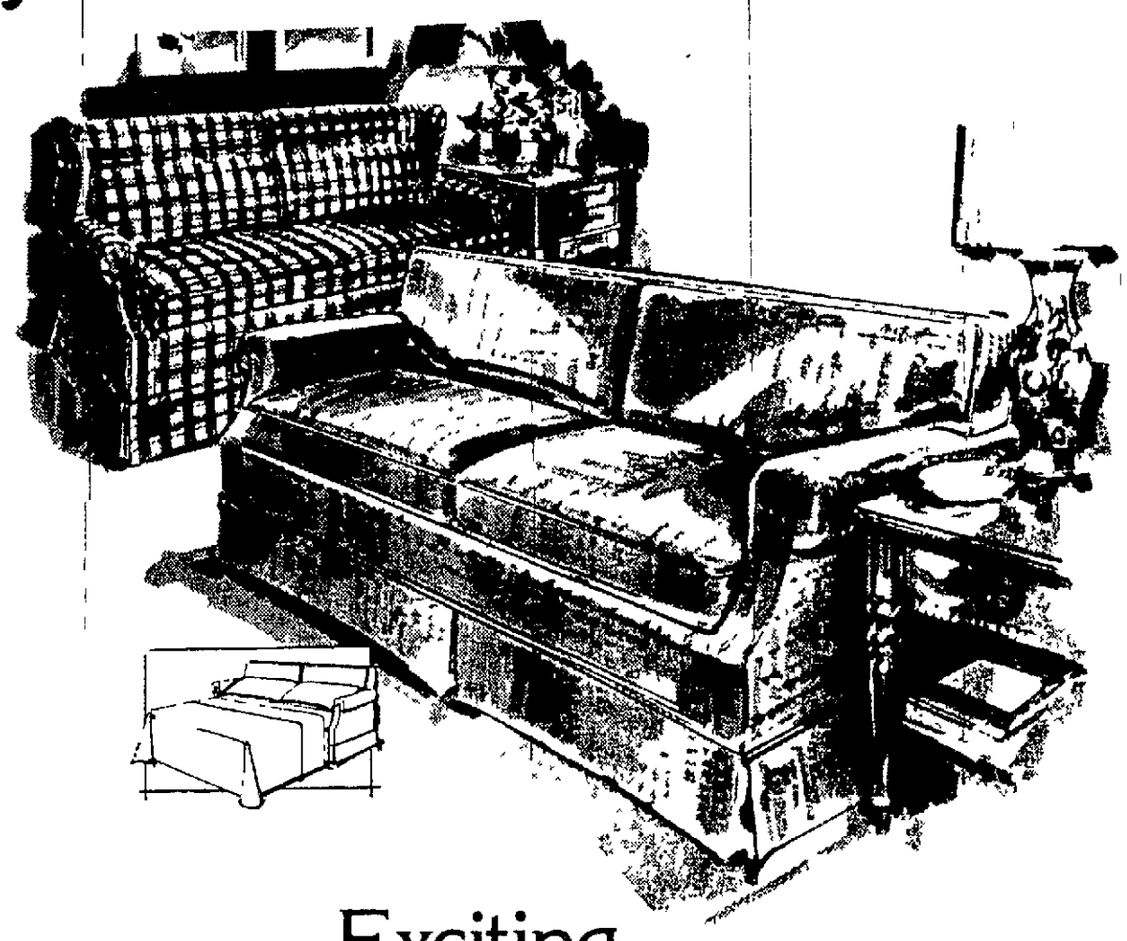

• Disengage power and stop motor before cleaning discharge, removing obstacles, making adjustments, or when leaving operating position.

• Keep children and pets a safe distance away.

• Do not allow children to operate machine or allow adults to operate it without proper instruction.

• Disengage all clutches and shift into neutral before starting motor Keep hands, feet and clothing away from power driven parts

Just remember that safe snow removal is no accident.

Complete Cover-Up For Problem Walls

A complete cover-up is advisable for the home decorator who wants to avoid that amateurish "loving-hands-at-home" look when redoing problem walls.

Easy-to-install paneling from Marlite not only hides a multitude of structural problems and past redecorating sins, it has the added dimensions of durability and ease-of-maintenance.

The paneling comes in both panels and planks. The planks provide a whole range of decorative good looks. from embossed or smooth woodgranied finishes in a whole palate of shades, to vivid and pastel colors and dramatic designs.

They can be applied over new framing or old walls: covering cracks, bulges, gouges, streaks and tell-tale signs of previous repairs.

The planks are especially easy to work with, being only a third of the width of regular panels. Most come in 8-foot lengths, but some are available in 10-foot lengths for those fighting the additional problem of high ceilings.

They are tongued-and-grooved for ease of installation. Clips and adhesive allow for secure application so that the finished wall has a professional look. And once the job is completed, it is finished—through! For the planks are much more duralbe thn paint and can be cleaned with a damp or sudsy cloth.

And to cap the delight of the do-it-yourselfer who has faced those problem walls before, the problems have been given a permanent solution without the all-too-regular rain of plaster dust and boggle of wet plaster, messy spackle paste, tape and goo that all too often accompany these major "minor" repairs.

On Treating Wood For Outdoor Life

KINGSTON

With the high cost of building materials and the need to conserve resources, it is important for homeowners and others using wood for outdoor construction to treat it for longer life. Professor E.W. Foss of the New York State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Cornell has some important information on how to add years to outdoor construction.

Relatively few woods have high resistance to decay and when continuously exposed to the weather or wet conditions. For the homeowner interested in using wood for fences, patio furniture, docks for a boat or other outdoor uses, care is needed in selecting a proper wood or wood treatment.

About the only woods with high decay resistance available at a building supply dealer are "redwood" from California, western cedar, and sometimes cypress from the south. All three are relatively expensive in the Northeast.

Cedar is commonly used for both interior and exterior siding for buildings. Redwood is more commonly used for outdoor furniture and fencing. Cypress is somewhat heavier, less commonly available, but is useful for many purposes where strength, appearance, and decay resistance is desired. Native cedar, locust, and white oak are about the only native woods with fairly high resistance to rot and weathering.

Where outdoor steps, boat docks, and unroofed structures are needed, pressure treated (with wood preservative) lumber is usually the best buy. Generally, pressure-treated western fir or southern pine in common sizes such as 2x4, 2x6, etc., are available at the larger building supply dealers. Southern pine is heavier than western lumber, is stronger, and can be identified by its very prominent light and dark graining.

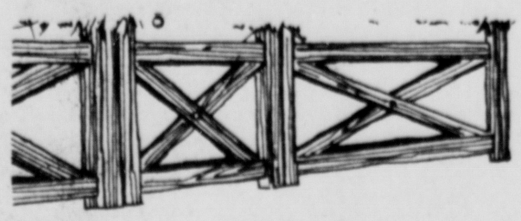

Agricultural Report: By Willial H. Palmer

Several types of wood preservatives are used by different lumber treatment firms, and there are also varying methods of applying pressure treatment.

Unfortunately, failure to provide a vacuum as the final stage of treatment — particularly when "creosote" is used, leaves the lumber with a very oil y surface. Such a surface is slippery during the first year of use, will tend to burn your skin, and will stain your clothes . It is recommended only for fence posts, utility poles, and walks or stairs where shoes are always worn. Care must be used when walking on these surfaces during the first few months.

Another very common preservative material is "Penta" — really Pentachlorophenol. This material is also irritating to some people's skin and should not be used on wood for table tops or chairs. Another material commonly used for structural lumber is copper napthanate (has a greenish color).

While these chemicals are usually available to be painted on the lumber or for lumber or posts to be sprayed or dipped into it, the small amount of material so applied is not a "permanent" treatment. Pressure treated material will usually last for 20 years or more, but a sprayed or painted application will add but a few years to the normal life of exposed woods.

When using wood exposed to weather, additional years of service are obtained by using either resistant wood varieties or preservative treated woods.

Make Yule Wreaths For Winter Dollars

DES MOINES, IOWA

There's huge seasonal market in this country for holiday wreaths, and it takes only a little effort to cash in on that demand. What better occupation than to sit by a warm fire and shpae boughs into beautiful ornaments which will hang in windows and doorways far and wide come December?

The first ingredient in your new occupation is access to suitable trees. Different parts of the country boast different species of fir: balsam, white, silver, grand and Douglas. Your local forester or nursery should be able to give you all the facts you need about the resources of your area's woods.

Your next step is to go on a "tipping" expedition to gather boughs. This is just as much fun as "making" and gives the whole family a chance to get involved in the project.

Bough collecting calls for a good pair of garden snippers, a ball of string and a whole batch of carrying sticks (branches about 6 feet long and an inch in diameter, cut in a sort of "Y" shape). When you've found a good stand of trees, simply snip off the ends of branches—"tips" — in lengths of about 15 to 18 inches and hook them over your stick, beginning in the crook of the "Y".

Keep stacking on the greenery until the holder is full (but not too heavy to carry). Then tie the string tightly from one end of the "Y" to the other, and you have a neat two-handled carrier full of fir tips. The loaded sticks are easily toted out of the woods, a pair at a time, between two people.

A couple of hints: Don't cut the tips too soon before you need them, or the needles will dry up and fall off after the wreath is made. And, more important, please don't strip the fir grove bare! Unless you're going to be clearing the land where you gather materials, be selective and kind to the trees.

Next, you'll need some additional materials. But before you go out and buy them, you might want to look into an arrangement which can save you that trouble and a good deal more: It may be possible to make wreaths for local people who sell them to big-time nurseries.

If not many folks in your parts are turning out wreaths, though, you might increase your profits by marketing your own creations at a roadside stand, to nurseries or through advertising.

One other alternative is to stop at the tipping stage and sell greenery to middlemen, who usually "make" themselves and always need materials.

Let's assume, though, that you're going to do the "making" yourself. Apart from tips (you should get about 3 20-inch wreaths from the contents of one stick), you'll need your snippers again, plus lots of spools of thin wire—22 to 24 gauge—and the heavy wire rings to which the boughs are attached. The last two items can be purchased from a hardware store, if you're not working for a middleman who supplies them.

All set? Then proceed as follows:

- Lay a wire ring down on a flat surface and attach one end of the thin wire to this base. The strand won't be cut until the wreath is completed.
- Take a tip and break off the top 6 to 8 inches. Fashion this and the other "leftover" pieces into a fan, with all the fat ends together.
- Place the fan—right side up—on the wire ring, hold the ends of the twigs together tightly, and wrap the thin wire a few times around both frame and greenery.
- Make another fan just like the first.
- Flip the ring over and place the second fan, also right side up, about 2 inches along the frame from the first (so that the two bunches are back to back). Fasten it with two or three tight turns of thin wire.
- Continue this process—making fans and attaching them to alternate sides of the ring, always right side up—all the way around the circle. Keep the wire wrapped tightly at all times, and try to make the bundles the same size and thickness throughout.
- Complete the circle by tucking the last two fans under the first, with the branches held up. Make these final bunches a bit shorter than normal, so they'll fit nicely.
- Wrap the last fans securely with thin wire, tie off the strand out of sight under the greenery, and let the branches fall back to cover the knot.

There you have it . . . your first wreath! You should be looking at an unbroken succession of fans on both sides of the frame, with no wire showing. If the overall effect is too shaggy, you can use the snippers to clean up the middle hole and trim off whatever pieces of branch you think are sticking out in the wrong places.

Wreaths are made in diameters ranging from 8 to 24 inches, and the price varies accordingly. It's easier to learn on a larger size, but once you know how, you can make more of the smaller ornaments in less time.

How about you? If you get organized right now, you may be able to gather enough "green energy" over the next few weeks to get you through the winter months. Good luck, and happy "making"!

After you've made something nice for the holidays, try making something nice for your stomach! For Reprint No. 117, "Make Your Own Yogurt Maker," send 25 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to The Mother Earth News®, in care of the Daily Freeman, Box 4994, Des Moines, Iowa 50306.

ADVICE FOR OUR READERS

DEAR ABBY. I am 27 and my wife is 24. It's Eldora's second marriage. She was married for eight years to a man who was 15 years older than she was, and they had one child.

Abby, I really love Eldora and her son, but we've been married only four months and she's left me five times! She stays away about a week each time She packs up and says she's going to her mother's.

The last time she left, I found out she went back to her ex-husband

When she came home, she told me they had lived as man and wife again, and she thinks she loves him more than me because he is the father of her child Also, she says he is a much better lover than I am (How is that for an insult?) On the other hand, she says he is a jealous man who treats her rough and likes to run with other women.

I love Eldora and would do anything to keep her home, but how can I arrange it? This running back and forth is no good Please help me Maybe I need someone to tell me to kick her fanny out for good

TROUBLED IN N.J.

DEAR TROUBLED: Tell Eldora exactly how you feel about her off-again-on-again relationship with her "ex." Insist on an "all-or-nothing" marriage. And if Eldora isn't willing to be a faithful wife to you, kick her fanny back to her "ex" with no regrets.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I made a long trip to another city to visit my son and his family.

The first evening, our son came home so late for dinner that we had to eat without him.

The second night, my husband and I dined alone since my son and his wife had a previous invitation for dinner

The third night, they asked us if we minded babysitting again while they called on friends.

The fourth night, we were asked if we'd stay with the children again while they went to a party.

The next day, we said we had to go home, and they acted very hurt because they hadn't seen hardly enough of us!

Abby, when parents visit their married children whom they do not see for months at a time, should they be expected to be unpaid babysitters?

USED IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR USED: No. And if it happens to you again, you asked for it.

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box No. 69700, L.A., Calif. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

Make Yule Wreaths For Winter Dollars

DES MOINES, IOWA

There's huge seasonal market in this country for holiday wreaths, and it takes only a little effort to cash in on that demand. What better occupation than to sit by a warm fire and shpae boughs into beautiful ornaments which will hang in windows and doorways far and wide come December?

The first ingredient in your new occupation is access to suitable trees. Different parts of the country boast different species of fir: balsam, white, silver, grand and Douglas. Your local forester or nursery should be able to give you all the facts you need about the resources of your area's woods.

Your next step is to go on a "tipping" expedition to gather boughs. This is just as much fun as "making" and gives the whole family a chance to get involved in the project.

Bough collecting calls for a good pair of garden snippers, a ball of string and a whole batch of carrying sticks (branches about 6 feet long and an inch in diameter, cut in a sort of "Y" shape). When you've found a good stand of trees, simply snip off the ends of branches—"tips" — in lengths of about 15 to 18 inches and hook them over your stick, beginning in the crook of the "Y".

Keep stacking on the greenery until the holder is full (but not too heavy to carry). Then tie the string tightly from one end of the "Y" to the other, and you have a neat two-handled carrier full of fir tips. The loaded sticks are easily toted out of the woods, a pair at a time, between two people.

A couple of hints: Don't cut the tips too soon before you need them, or the needles will dry up and fall off after the wreath is made. And, more important, please don't strip the fir grove bare! Unless you're going to be clearing the land where you gather materials, be selective and kind to the trees.

Next, you'll need some additional materials. But before you go out and buy them, you might want to look into an arrangement which can save you that trouble and a good deal more: It may be possible to make wreaths for local people who sell them to big-time nurseries.

If not many folks in your parts are turning out wreaths, though, you might increase your profits by marketing your own creations at a roadside stand, to nurseries or through advertising.

One other alternative is to stop at the tipping stage and sell greenery to middlemen, who usually "make" themselves and always need materials.

Let's assume, though, that you're going to do the "making" yourself. Apart from tips (you should get about 3 20-inch wreaths from the contents of one stick), you'll need your snippers again, plus lots of spools of thin wire—22 to 24 gauge—and the heavy wire rings to which the boughs are attached. The last two items can be purchased from a hardware store, if you're not working for a middleman who supplies them.

All set? Then proceed as follows:

- Lay a wire ring down on a flat surface and attach one end of the thin wire to this base. The strand won't be cut until the wreath is completed.
- Take a tip and break off the top 6 to 8 inches. Fashion this and the other "leftover" pieces into a fan, with all the fat ends together.
- Place the fan—right side up—on the wire ring, hold the ends of the twigs together tightly, and wrap the thin wire a few times around both frame and greenery.
- Make another fan just like the first.
- Flip the ring over and place the second fan, also right side up, about 2 inches along the frame from the first (so that the two bunches are back to back). Fasten it with two or three tight turns of thin wire.
- Continue this process—making fans and attaching them to alternate sides of the ring, always right side up—all the way around the circle. Keep the wire wrapped tightly at all times, and try to make the bundles the same size and thickness throughout.
- Complete the circle by tucking the last two fans under the first, with the branches held up. Make these final bunches a bit shorter than normal, so they'll fit nicely.
- Wrap the last fans securely with thin wire, tie off the strand out of sight under the greenery, and let the branches fall back to cover the knot.

There you have it . . . your first wreath! You should be looking at an unbroken succession of fans on both sides of the frame, with no wire showing. If the overall effect is too shaggy, you can use the snippers to clean up the middle hole and trim off whatever pieces of branch you think are sticking out in the wrong places.

Wreaths are made in diameters ranging from 8 to 24 inches, and the price varies accordingly. It's easier to learn on a larger size, but once you know how, you can make more of the smaller ornaments in less time.

How about you? If you get organized right now, you may be able to gather enough "green energy" over the next few weeks to get you through the winter months. Good luck, and happy "making"!

After you've made something nice for the holidays, try making something nice for your stomach! For Reprint No. 117, "Make Your Own Yogurt Maker," send 25 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to The Mother Earth News®, in care of the Daily Freeman, Box 4994, Des Moines, Iowa 50306.

For Sunday, Nov. 30, 1975

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You have the innate ability today to inspire others to go forth and do things they know they should do, but for which they have previously lacked motivation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Rejoice at the little flashes of brilliance that shine through an otherwise dull day. When you get a bright thought, follow through, don't belabor it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You're better equipped for the short pull than the long haul today. Stick to tasks that require quick bursts of energy, then rest.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) A person you thought you know well will exhibit a far deeper perception than you thought she possessed. You'll be intrigued with the discovery.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Don't bank too heavily on a quiet day at home today. Drop-ins are likely, but you'll relish playing host.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You are inclined to be restless today. Ease the tension by dropping in on a friend for a short visit.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You are amazingly resourceful today. You can make a fine profit on something that others would turn their noses up at.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) If something comes up on which you need to make a decision, seclude yourself and reason it out. Others would only confuse you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You could feel pressed into a corner today, but don't fret. You'll work your way out in a manner that may amaze even you with its originality.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Concentrate on your newest interest today. Though it seems frivolous, later you will find you've laid a firm foundation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You will do something by impulse that could amaze your friends and even yourself. After the surprise, reaction will be in your favor.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Fortune smiles, but fleetingly. If you pounce upon it at the first blush, you can capitalize on luck today. If you hesitate, all is lost.

Your Birthday

Nov. 30, 1975

Good things will happen to you this coming year so frequently they will almost seem monotonous. However, you can't rely totally on chance to get you out of sticky situations.

For Monday, Dec. 1, 1975

ARIES (March 21-April 19) In business negotiations today, take the long range view, rather than the immediate one. Plan ahead for your tomorrows.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) This is a good day to bring to the surface little problems that have caused you troubles with a co-worker. They can be ironed out amicably.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you approach your work in the proper frame of mind today your tasks will not be nearly as difficult as you imagined.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You can't delegate the managerial role today on a matter requiring your personal supervision. Monitor everything.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Be reasonable in family discussions today. If the majority sees things one way, it could be they're right and you're wrong.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) This can be a profitable day for you businesswise if you're not afraid to bargain. Call the other guy's bluff if need be.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Give some thought today to better organizing your financial affairs. Returns will be greater if you plan well now.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You needn't feel reluctant today about talking to one who is long overdue in repaying an obligation. Something can be worked out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You have some information that could give you additional leverage in dealing with a friend. Use it cautiously.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A friend may impose upon you today for a favor. Do what you can to help. You'll be sowing seeds for your own good fortune.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Success will come to you today, but it won't be easy. Don't change plans unless you're positive they'll be improved.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be on your toes today. You'll be the one to recognize pitfalls or advantages your associates won't perceive.

Your Birthday

Dec. 1, 1975

You'll be fortunate this coming year in dealings with large groups or organizations. Don't let size or stature lead you to believe you don't fit in.

ADVICE FOR OUR READERS

Dear Abby
By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am 27 and my wife is 24. It's Eldora's second marriage. She was married for eight years to a man who was 15 years older than she was, and they had one child.

Abby, I really love Eldora and her son, but we've been married only four months and she's left me five times! She stays away about a week each time. She packs up and says she's going to her mother's.

The last time she left, I found out she went back to her ex-husband.

When she came home, she told me they had lived as man and wife again, and she thinks she loves him more than me because he is the father of her child. Also, she says he is a much better lover than I am. (How is that for an insult?) On the other hand, she says he is a jealous man who treats her rough and likes to run with other women.

I love Eldora and would do anything to keep her home, but how can I arrange it? This running back and forth is no good. Please help me. Maybe I need someone to tell me to kick her fanny out for good.

TROUBLED IN N.J.

DEAR TROUBLED: Tell Eldora exactly how you feel about her off-again-on-again relationship with her "ex." Insist on an "all-or-nothing" marriage. And if Eldora isn't willing to be a faithful wife to you, kick her fanny back to her "ex" with no regrets.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I made a long trip to another city to visit my son and his family.

The first evening, our son came home so late for dinner that we had to eat without him.

The second night, my husband and I dined alone since my son and his wife had a previous invitation for dinner.

The third night, they asked us if we minded babysitting again while they called on friends.

The fourth night, we were asked if we'd stay with the children again while they went to a party.

The next day, we said we had to go home, and they acted very hurt because they hadn't seen hardly enough of us!

Abby, when parents visit their married children whom they do not see for months at a time, should they be expected to be unpaid babysitters?

USED IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR USED: No. And if it happens to you again, you asked for it.

Everyone has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply, write to ABBY: Box No. 69700, L.A., Calif. 90069. Enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

ROLLING STONE

ERIC CARMEN

By Dave Marsh

"Eric Carmen" (Arista AL 4057).

When the Raspberries 1974 masterpiece, 'Overnight Sensation,' died commercially, the group broke up and its creative focus, producer Jimmy Ienner and all-around star Eric Carmen (who writes, sings, plays guitar and keyboards, while looking as much the star as anyone since Rod Stewart), headed for a solo career. "Eric Carmen" is as enormously influenced by the Beach Boys, Beatles and Who as everything the Raspberries did, but Carmen himself seems closer now to a truly successful synthesis of his own.

Carmen and Ienner have put together an overtly ambitious record, thematically a celebration of rock & roll, but full of allusions to Rachmaninoff's piano music. This is particularly obvious n the album's seven-minute tour de force, the lush "All By Myself,' which is also an interesting bit of lyrical evidence that Carmen is discarding his obsession with adolesence. Nonetheless, Carmen continues to approach his lust for stardom with a kid's abandon: 'On Broadway,' which closes the record, is perfectly appropriate and 'No Hard Feelings,' his eulogy for the Raspberries, is perfectly believable.

The album isn't unflawed. There is an overabundance of ballads and, even though all of them are heavily rhythmic, Carmen remains a little slick for the rock & roll stardom he wants. He is incapable of Rod Stewart's self-abusive imagery or Mick Jagger's orgiastic exuberance. But, in deemphasizing the teenage idiom for a more mature perspective, Eric Carmen may have placed himself on the right track at last. Certainly, no one has ever worked harder for stardom, and very few deserve it more.

Bonnie Raitt: "Home Plate" (Warner Bros. BS 2864).

Working with different producers and musicians each time, Bonnie Raitt never managed to establish an identity with her first three albums. As a live performer, she is distinctly the new queen of white blues, superior in intensity and sensibility to Maria Muldaur, her nearest competitor, more committed than Linda Ronstadt, whose recent success overwhelms her. With "Home Plate," however, Raitt has finally found a format which works on record.

Producer Paul Rothchild has kept Raitt in check as a blues and R&B artist, closer in style to such Chicago singers as Koko Taylor and Denise LaSalle than anyone else. Her forte remains the discovery of soul in songs by post-folk-rock writers — here, Eric Kaz, Orleans' John and Johanna Hall, and J.D. Souther, among others — but the best track on this album is New Orleans R&B kingpin Allen Toussaint's 'What Do You Want the Boy to Do.' For the first time, Raitt's influences and potential seem fully abosrbed and realized, without the coyness or clumsiness of her earlier work, and with much more confidence. Raitt's best individual track remains the heartbreaking 'Been Too Long at the Fair,' from her second album; but anyone who can turn the Hall's 'Good Enough' into something Willie Dixon might have written has gone beyond her apprenticeship. Bonnie Raitt's artistry is now full-fledged.

Ellenville Bicentennial Senior

Ellenville High School principal Dr. Cary Wood, left, congratulates Mariko Ballentine, EHS winner of the Bicentennial Seniors Scholarship competition, as Michael DelGaizo, faculty coordinator of the competition looks on. The Ellenville competition, in which seniors were asked to compose a "Bicentennial Minute" and a commentary on the minute's historical validity, as well as take a current events test, is part of a nationwide scholarship program. Miss Ballentine will now compete to become one of two state representatives in the national competition. Each state winner will receive a $1,000 scholarship and all-expense paid trip to the national finals in Williamsburg, Va. in January. The grand prize winner will get a $10,000 scholarship and have his/her Bicentennial Minute presented on CBS television.

Three Cheers for Saugerties Squad

TROY

QUESTION: "The surface of a wooden cube, each edge of which measures N inches, is painted red. After the paint has dried, the cube is sawed into 1-inch cubes by making cuts parallel to its faces all the way through the cube. In terms of N., how many cuts are necessary? How many 1-inch cubes result which have all 6 faces painted red?"

Any young woman planning to enter college next fall who can answer that sort of question correctly could win a $2,000 college scholarship in a one-hour examination competition at Russell Sage College.

The Department of Mathematics is sponsoring its second annual contest for high school seniors in 344 area high schools on December 5.

The contest requires mathematical creativity and imagination, but not slide rules, calculators, or tables. No knowledge of calculus is necessary, and mathematical reasoning ability is more important than a mastery of a particular field, such as algebra or geometry.

Dr. K. Scott Kinerson, chairman of the methematics department, announced this year's winner will receive $500 per year for four years at the Troy women's college. Contest participants are expected to be nominated by their high school guidance counselors or mathematics instructors at Kingston High School, John A. Coleman High School, Kingston.

Dr. Kinerson said that the winner may use the prize tuition in any program for which she applies and is admitted at Sage, not merely in mathematics. No exams will be returned, and the mathematics department will be the sole judge of winners. The winner, first and second place runners-up, and honorable mention winners will be announced by letter to each participating high school shortly after the competition.

If for any reason the winner should not enter Sage next fall, the scholarship will be awarded to the first runner-up, and similarly, if she does not enter, it will go to the second runner-up.

Eileen Ryan, now a mathematics major at Sage and a graduate of Maple Hill High School in Castleon-on-Hudson, was the recipient of the scholarship last year.

Dr. Kinerson added that this year's expanded competition will take in schools lying within a 100-mile radius of Troy in New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts and Vermont.

In addition to the contest, the college has planned several events of interest to the students, their parents, teachers, and counselors, all of whom have been invited to the campus on December 5.

Tours of the campus will be conducted by Sage student guides, with stops planned for the computer center, booksore, library, and the student center. During the morning session while the students are competing, the other guests will have a q uestion-and-answer session on financial aid and admissions policies.

Following luncheon in the dining hall, a program will feature "Russell Sage Women in Mathematics," with details of career possibilities in the field, how to prepare for them, and academic advisement on programs of study.

Dr. Kinerson said the competition answers the increased interest in mathematics as a major for women students. "Women mathematicians are finding many more career openings at top managerial levels," he said, pointing out that recent Sage graduates in mathematics are working as actuarial research assistants, computer specialists, statistical analysts, communications engineering researchers, electric power transmission analysts, and college professors.

And for budding women mathematicians and any puzzled readers, be disclosed the answer to last year's question:

ANSWER: Number of cuts needed in terms of N: 3(N-1) Number of cubes with 6 faces red: 1 (if N=1) 0 (for all other values of N)

KHS Honors

KINGSTON

The 1975 issue of Kingston High School's literary and visual arts magazine, Reason and Rhyme, has been named an outstanding student publication by the Empire State School Press Association. The honor was received at ESSPA's awards banquet held in the Hotel Syracuse in Syracuse.

The banquet is held annually to recognize the best school magazines, newspapers, and yearbooks produced in New York State. In addition, seminars are held at Syracuse University, where instructors give suggestions for producing better and more successful publications.

This marks the tenth year that Reason and Rhyme has been honored by the Association. Delegates to the banquet and seminars were Marc Feldman, the current editor-in-chief of Reason and Rhyme, Elaine Lipton, last year's editor-in-chief, and Barbara Barz and Hilda Meisner, editors. Advisor to the magazine is Richard Schaefer.

Rondout Valley Dramatics

KYSERIKE

Rehearsals, memorization, sets, props — all the ingredients that go into a play production can be found these days at Rondout Valley High School. The Class of 1976 has begun work on the upcoming senior production of Woody Allen's "Don't Drink the Water."

The play, a satirical comedy, takes place in a small Communist country behind the Iron Curtain. The United States embassy is temporarily under the humble Axel Magee, when the Hollanders, a caterer's family from Newark, N.J., rush in, taking refuge from the Communist police. Accusations of spying are made, and there start the zany adventures of the Hollanders and the inhabitants of the embassy.

Under the direction of Edward Kalish, of the English Department, the play is slated to be presented on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, December 3, 4, and 5.

Awards

Kingston High School students Brian Harding and Marc Feldman (R) are winners of the 1975 National Council of Teachers of English Achievement Award in Writing. Taking part in the presentation are Dan H. Allen (L), high school principal and Susan Gregorius, English teacher. The contest was held last January with English teachers making recommendations in February. The council recommends award winners, now seniors for college scholarships. Names of students are sent to admissions officers and English department chairmen of colleges and universities throughout the nation.

Teen Scene

They Put the 'Die' in Diet

By Lei

Right about now, a lot of teens are starting on a diet as part of their holiday preparations. They hope that by December they'll be down a size or two—and that after the holiday gorging they won't weigh too much more than they do right now. Unfortunately, by the ed of the month all-too-many of these diets will be in the limbo of good intentions—and that includes some perscribed by doctors for seriously overweight teens. All it takes to stick to a diet is will-power — and supportive asstance from friends and family when the will-power wavers. Without one, often the other is useless.

Doctors are often furious when they see a diet undermined by the very people who ought to be eager to see a heavy teen slim down. One doctor said that every broken diet he had seen was the result of "diet saboteurs"—associates of the dieter, who, for one reason or another had undermined the dieter's determination instead of offering encouragement.

Parents have been known to nag a teen into a diet, and then nag him or her right back out of it. Very often, when a child is a toddler, parents measure their success in terms of height and weight gain, how well the child eats, and whether they can get spinach and carrot juice into their offspirng.

"Eat all your beets, Barbie, and you'll have chocolate cake for dessert." Barbie grows up thinking beets stink and that chocolate is the goal of life. By the time she's thirteen, Barbie is 20 pounds overweight, with complexion problems and dental difficulties. Barbie's doctor puts her on a conservative 1800-calorie balanced diet. She loses about half her overweight. Barbie's parents see her losing her fat and getting a figure—passing up her cake for nutritious vegetables. They ought to be proud, but somehow they can't forget the cranky five-year-old who didn't want dinner. Perhaps they don't really want to see their roly-poly little girl turning into a shapely young woman. In any case, the pressure starts. "You're losing weight too fast — you don't want to get sick, do you?" "Barbie, you've been good on your diet all week, so have a little piece of cake, I made it special for you!" "Have another serving, you can make it up tomorrow . . ." It doesn't take Barbie long to get the message that she'll be pleasing her parents by staying chubby.

Other overweight people are experts at ruining diets. Particularly if they've gone off a diet recently, and they can't bear to see one of their friends show more will-power than they had themselves. They're the ones who wipe you out with, "Aren't you getting awfully skinny?" "Have you been sick lately?" "Boy your favorite dress is getting too big for you, isn't it?" Followed by, "I'm going over for a chocolate shake and some fries, want to come along?" And some thin people like to hang out with a fatty because it makes them feel even slimmer and more superior. They get to feeling awfully threatened if their security blanket starts to slim down—particularly if the "blanket" might get thinner than they are!

Who wants to have a fat boy or girl friend? Too many people, it seems. When you're trying to lose weight because you want to make a good impression on your sweetheart, it's very little encouragement to be told, "Wow, you've been cranky since you've been eating those carrot sticks." Or, "That diet must be working, it's like hugging a washboard." Or "Aren't you afraid of getting stretch marks?" The situation is even worse if the sweetheart is a plumpie too —and isn't on a diet. The jealousy alone is enough to make you lose weight.

If your parents or brothers and sisters are overweight, too, they're liable to be about as much help as a sieve in a thunderstorm. Yes, there have even been cases of overweight doctors who gave their young patients so little support with their diets that the diets got dropped. "What's this? You only lost two pounds last week? Are you sure you didn't cheat?"

Some experts feel that the best way to avoid the diet ditchers is to keep your diet as secret as you can. "Who me? Dieting? No, I just don't feel like a hamburger today, I've got this craving for salad." "Oh, do I look like I'm losing weight? It must be my new hairdo."

As for parents, if you're a public relations expert, perhaps you can get the whole family to diet with you—overseight is the great American health menace. If not, don't make a big deal out of it—keep mealtimes happy. "I'll pass up the mashed potatoes, Mom, but give me another slice of chicken." "Just a little slice of cake, sis, I stopped with the gang and had ice cream." "I'll stop deiting after Chirstmas, Dad, but I really want to wear that red dress."

And finally, remember—if you're not dieting, but you have a friend who is, don't tempt. Let him or her tempt you instead—into losing a pound or so before the Holiday Gorge.

ROLLING STONE

ERIC CARMEN

By Dave Marsh

"Eric Carmen" (Arista AL 4057).

When the Raspberries 1974 masterpiece, 'Overnight Sensation,' died commercially, the group broke up and its creative focus, producer Jimmy Ienner and all-around star Eric Carmen (who writes, sings, plays guitar and keyboards, while looking as much the star as anyone since Rod Stewart), headed for a solo career. "Eric Carmen" is as enormously influenced by the Beach Boys, Beatles and Who as everything the Raspberries did, but Carmen himself seems closer now to a truly successful synthesis of his own.

Carmen and Ienner have put together an overtly ambitious record, thematically a celebration of rock & roll, but full of allusions to Rachmaninoff's piano music. This is particularly obvious n the album's seven-minute tour de force, the lush "All By Myself,' which is also an interesting bit of lyrical evidence that Carmen is discarding his obsession with adolesence. Nonetheless, Carmen continues to approach his lust for stardom with a kid's abandon: 'On Broadway,' which closes the record, is perfectly appropriate and 'No Hard Feelings,' his eulogy for the Raspberries, is perfectly believable.

The album isn't unflawed. There is an overabundance of ballads and, even though all of them are heavily rhythmic, Carmen remains a little slick for the rock & roll stardom he wants. He is incapable of Rod Stewart's self-abusive imagery or Mick Jagger's orgiastic exuberance. But, in deemphasizing the teenage idiom for a more mature perspective, Eric Carmen may have placed himself on the right track at last. Certainly, no one has ever worked harder for stardom, and very few deserve it more.

Bonnie Raitt: "Home Plate" (Warner Bros. BS 2864).

Working with different producers and musicians each time, Bonnie Raitt never managed to establish an identity with her first three albums. As a live performer, she is distinctly the new queen of white blues, superior in intensity and sensibility to Maria Muldaur, her nearest competitor, more committed than Linda Ronstadt, whose recent success overwhelms her. With "Home Plate," however, Raitt has finally found a format which works on record.

Producer Paul Rothchild has kept Raitt in check as a blues and R&B artist, closer in style to such Chicago singers as Koko Taylor and Denise LaSalle than anyone else. Her forte remains the discovery of soul in songs by post-folk-rock writers — here, Eric Kaz, Orleans' John and Johanna Hall, and J.D. Souther, among others — but the best track on this album is New Orleans R&B kingpin Allen Toussaint's 'What Do You Want the Boy to Do.' For the first time, Raitt's influences and potential seem fully abosrbed and realized, without the coyness or clumsiness of her earlier work, and with much more confidence. Raitt's best individual track remains the heartbreaking 'Been Too Long at the Fair,' from her second album; but anyone who can turn the Hall's 'Good Enough' into something Willie Dixon might have written has gone beyond her apprenticeship. Bonnie Raitt's artistry is now full-fledged.

Three Cheers for Saugerties Squad

QUESTION: "The surface of a wooden cube, each edge of which measures N inches, is painted red. After the paint has dried, the cube is sawed into 1-inch cubes by making cuts parallel to its faces all the way through the cube. In terms of N., how many cuts are necessary? How many 1-inch cubes result which have all 6 faces painted red?"

Any young woman planning to enter college next fall who can answer that sort of question correctly could win a $2,000 college scholarship in a one-hour examination competition at Russell Sage College.

The Department of Mathematics is sponsoring its second annual contest for high school seniors in 344 area high schools on December 5.

The contest requires mathematical creativity and imagination, but not slide rules, calculators, or tables. No knowledge of calculus is necessary, and mathematical reasoning ability is more important than a mastery of a particular field, such as algebra or geometry.

Dr. K. Scott Kinerson, chairman of the methematics department, announced this year's winner will receive $500 per year for four years at the Troy women's college. Contest participants are expected to be nominated by their high school guidance counselors or mathematics instructors at Kingston High School, John A. Coleman High School, Kingston.

Dr. Kinerson said that the winner may use the prize tuition in any program for which she applies and is admitted at Sage, not merely in mathematics. No exams will be returned, and the mathematics department will be the sole judge of winners. The winner, first and second place runners-up, and honorable mention winners will be announced by letter to each participating high school shortly after the competition.

If for any reason the winner should not enter Sage next fall, the scholarship will be awarded to the first runner-up, and similarly, if she does not enter, it will go to the second runner-up.

Eileen Ryan, now a mathematics major at Sage and a graduate of Maple Hill High School in Castleon-on-Hudson, was the recipient of the scholarship last year.

Dr. Kinerson added that this year's expanded competition will take in schools lying within a 100-mile radius of Troy in New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts and Vermont.

In addition to the contest, the college has planned several events of interest to the students, their parents, teachers, and counselors, all of whom have been invited to the campus on December 5.

Tours of the campus will be conducted by Sage student guides, with stops planned for the computer center, booksore, library, and the student center. During the morning session while the students are competing, the other guests will have a q uestion-and-answer session on financial aid and admissions policies.

Following luncheon in the dining hall, a program will feature "Russell Sage Women in Mathematics," with details of career possibilities in the field, how to prepare for them, and academic advisement on programs of study.

Dr. Kinerson said the competition answers the increased interest in mathematics as a major for women students. "Women mathematicians are finding many more career openings at top managerial levels," he said, pointing out that recent Sage graduates in mathematics are working as actuarial research assistants, computer specialists, statistical analysts, communications engineering researchers, electric power transmission analysts, and college professors.

And for budding women mathematicians and any puzzled readers, he disclosed the answer to last year's question:

ANSWER: Number of cuts needed in terms of N: 3(N-1) Number of cubes with 6 faces red: 1 (if N=1) 0 (for all other values of N)

KHS Honors

KINGSTON

The 1975 issue of Kingston High School's literary and visual arts magazine, Reason and Rhyme, has been named an outstanding student publication by the Empire State School Press Association. The honor was received at ESSPA's awards banquet held in the Hotel Syracuse in Syracuse.

The banquet is held annually to recognize the best school magazines, newspapers, and yearbooks produced in New York State. In addition, seminars are held at Syracuse University, where instructors give suggestions for producing better and more successful publications.

This marks the tenth year that Reason and Rhyme has been honored by the Association. Delegates to the banquet and seminars were Marc Feldman, the current editor-in-chief of Reason and Rhyme, Elaine Lipton, last year's editor-in-chief, and Barbara Barz and Hilda Meisner, editors. Advisor to the magazine is Richard Schaefer.

Rondout Valley Dramatics

KYSERIKE

Rehearsals, memorization, sets, props — all the ingredients that go into a play production can be found these days at Rondout Valley High School. The Class of 1976 has begun work on the upcoming senior production of Woody Allen's "Don't Drink the Water.'

The play, a satirical comedy, takes place in a small Communist country behind the Iron Curtain. The United States embassy is temporarily under the humble Axel Magee, when the Hollanders, a caterer's family from Newark, N.J., rush in, taking refuge from the Communist police. Accusations of spying are made, and there start the zany adventures of the Hollanders and the inhabitants of the embassy.

Under the direction of Edward Kalish, of the English Department, the play is slated to be presented on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, December 3, 4, and 5.

Ellenville Bicentennial Senior

Ellenville High School principal Dr. Cary Wood, left, congratulates Mariko Ballentine, EHS winner of the Bicentennial Seniors Scholarship competition, as Michael DelGaizo, faculty coordinator of the competition looks on. The Ellenville competition, in which seniors were asked to compose a "Bicentennial Minute" and a commentary on the minute's historical validity, as well as take a current events test, is part of a nationwide scholarship program. Miss Ballentine will now compete to become one of two state representatives in the national competition. Each state winner will receive a $1,000 scholarship and all-expense paid trip to the national finals in Williamsburg, Va. in January. The grand prize winner will get a $10,000 scholarship and have his/her Bicentennial Minute presented on CBS television.

Awards

Kingston High School students Brian Harding and Marc Feldman (R) are winners of the 1975 National Council of Teachers of English Achievement Award in Writing. Taking part in the presentation are Dan H. Allen (L), high school principal and Susan Gregorius, English teacher. The contest was held last January with English teachers making recommendations in February. The council recommends award winners, now seniors for college scholarships. Names of students are sent to admissions officers and English department chairmen of colleges and universities throughout the nation.

Teen Scene

By Lei

Right about now, a lot of teens are starting on a diet as part of their holiday preparations. They hope that by December they'll be down a size or two—and that after the holiday gorging they won't weigh too much more than they do right now. Unfortunately, by the ed of the month all-too-many of these diets will be in the limbo of good intentions—and that includes some perscribed by doctors for seriously overweight teens. All it takes to stick to a diet is will-power — and supportive asstance from friends and family when the will-power wavers. Without one, often the other is useless.

Doctors are often furious when they see a diet undermined by the very people who ought to be eager to see a heavy teen slim down. One doctor said that every broken diet he had seen was the result of "diet saboteurs"—associates of the dieter, who, for one reason or another had undermined the dieter's determination instead of offering encouragement.

Parents have been known to nag a teen into a diet, and then nag him or her right back out of it. Very often, when a child is a toddler, parents measure their success in terms of height and weight gain, how well the child eats, and whether they can get spinach and carrot juice into their offspirng.

"Eat all your beets, Barbie, and you'll have chocolate cake for dessert." Barbie grows up thinking beets stink and that chocolate is the goal of life. By the time she's thirteen, Barbie is 20 pounds overweight, with complexion problems and dental difficulties. Barbie's doctor puts her on a conservative 1800-calorie balanced diet. She loses about half her overweight. Barbie's parents see her losing her fat and getting a figure—passing up her cake for nutritious vegetables. They ought to be proud, but somehow they can't forget the cranky five-year-old who didn't want dinner. Perhaps they don't really want to see their roly-poly little girl turning into a shapely young woman. In any case, the pressure starts. "You're losing weight too fast — you don't want to get sick, do you?" "Barbie, you've been good on your diet all week, so have a little piece of cake, I made it special for you!" "Have another serving, you can make it up tomorrow . . ." It doesn't take Barbie long to get the message that she'll be pleasing her parents by staying chubby.

Other overweight people are experts at ruining diets. Particularly if they've gone off a diet recently, and they can't bear to see one of their friends show more will-power than they had themselves. They're the ones who wipe you out with, "Aren't you getting awfully skinny?" "Have you been sick lately?" "Boy your favorite dress is getting too big for you, isn't it?" Followed by, "I'm going over for a chocolate shake and some fries, want to come along?" And some thin people like to hang out with a fatty because it makes them feel even slimmer and more superior. They get to feeling awfully threatened if their security blanket starts to slim down—particularly if the "blanket" might get thinner than they are!

Who wants to have a fat boy or girl friend? Too many people, it seems. When you're trying to lose weight because you want to make a good impression on your sweetheart, it's very little encouragement to be told, "Wow, you've been cranky since you've been eating those carrot sticks." Or, "That diet must be working, it's like hugging a washboard." Or "Aren't you afraid of getting stretch marks?" The situation is even worse if the sweetheart is a plumpie too —and isn't on a diet. The jealousy alone is enough to make you lose weight.

If your parents or brothers and sisters are overweight, too, they're liable to be about as much help as a sieve in a thunderstorm. Yes, there have even been cases of overweight doctors who gave their young patients so little support with their diets that the diets got dropped. "What's this? You only lost two pounds last week? Are you sure you didn't cheat?"

Some experts feel that the best way to avoid the diet ditchers is to keep your diet as secret as you can. "Who me? Dieting? No, I just don't feel like a hamburger today, I've got this craving for salad." "Oh, do I look like I'm losing weight? It must be my new hairdo."

As for parents, if you're a public relations expert, perhaps you can get the whole family to diet with you—overseight is the great American health menace. If not, don't make a big deal out of it—keep mealtimes happy. "I'll pass up the mashed potatoes, Mom, but give me another slice of chicken." "Just a little slice of cake, sis, I stopped with the gang and had ice cream." "I'll stop deiting after Chirstmas, Dad, but I really want to wear that red dress."

And finally, remember—if you're not dieting, but you have a friend who is, don't tempt. Let him or her tempt you instead—into losing a pound or so before the Holiday Gorge.

Philadelphia Prepares for Pontiff with High Hopes

POPE PAUL TO VISIT

By UPI

It was Columbus Day, a special day in Italian-American relations, when Joe and Josephine DiPrinzio picked up their telephone in Philadelphia and dialed Milan, Italy.

With Cardinal John Krol looking on and speaking perfect Italian, the Diprinzios invited Prof. Osvaldo Brivio and his wife, Marilisa, to stay with them during the 41st Interntional Eucharistic Congress.

The Congress, an eight-day spiritual assembly essentially a Roman Catholic program but which also includes other Christians, will be held in Philadelphia next Aug. 1-8 and will be the first time in 50 years the event will be held in ths United States.

DiPrinzio's phone call to Milan kicked off a program in which church officials in the Philadelphia-Camden area are seeking to recruit 20,000 rooms in 20,000 homes for international visitors to the Congress. Planners say they expect more than 1 million Catholics from around the globe will attend.

That number could swell if Pope Paul VI decides to attend, an event being eagerly anticipated by the organizers of the Congress.

The 78-year old pontiff has attended two previous Congresses —the 38th at Bombay and the 39th at Bogota and he has indicated that, health permitting, he would like to come to the Philadelphia meeting. It would be Pope Paul's first official visit to the United States. In 1965 he visited the United Nations and celebrated Mass at Yankee Stadium but the visit was considered a visit to the world body and not the United States.

In general, congresses are held to focus attention on the Holy Eucharist, to deepen ths understanding and devotion of believers to the mystery of Christ's presence in the bread and wine of communion.

The theme of the 41st Congress is "Hungers of the Human Family," with sub-themes around such areas as the hunger for God, for food, for freedom and justice, for love, for truth, for understanding, for peace and "for Jesus, the Bread of Life."

At the same time, Congresses traditionally have been more than just a meeting. Instead, they have highlighted a yearlong series of events designed to call attention to the major focus.

This Congress, for example, will launch what it calls "Operation Rice Bowl," an interfaith project encouraging American families to eat a sacrificial meal, pray a common prayer for the starving and make an offering at their own dining room table to feed the hungry of the world.

Primarily, however, the emphasis of the Congress will be on spiritual renewal — a renewal that was called for by Vatican Council II and which is also supposed to be a major theme of the current celebration of 1975 as a Holy Year by Roman Catholics.

Krol, who serves as chairman of the board of governors of the Congress, recently underlined this emphasis at a meeting of church leaders.

"Today, transcendent religious belief is engaged in direct contestation with a secular-humanistic world view which rejects supernatural relivion and absolute moral values," he said. "For many Catholics, the influence of secular society counts more than the influence of the Church."

"The Eucharistic Congress," he said, "affords the Church in the United States opportunity to continue the spiritual renewal through Eucharistic union with Christ in the Sacrament of Unity."

Advent Series Guest Named

KINGSTON

The first of three mid-week advent services, planned by the Kingston Lutheran Council, will be held Wednesday 7:30 p.m. at the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer, Wurts and Rogers Streets.

Speaker at the service will be Mrs. Betty Hoaglund who has lived and worked in Japan since 1954. With her husband, the Rev. Alan Hoaglund, she has been engaged in a unique team ministry with a Japanese couple which involved an educational and service center approach to ministry. Mrs. Hoaglund, who comes from Easton, Pa., has a master's degree in Social Work from the University of California in Berkeley.

Other participants in the advent Vespers will be the pastors of the other three churches in the Council, Pastors Arne Bendtz, Gary Mehl and Alvin Messersmith as well as the host pastor, the Rev. David C. Gaise, DD.

The service on Dec. 10 will be at Immanuel Church and Dec. 17 at St.Paul Church, according to the president of the Council, Robert Deik, who invites everyone to attend.

Mormons Observed Bible Week

LAKE KATRINE

Calling the scriptures a "treasure of wisdom, inspiration, and practical suggestions for more abundant living," the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, under the direction of Pres. Spencer W. Kimball, pledged its full support to National Bible Week, Nov. 23-30, and issued the following statement:

"Teach your family, beginning with yourself, to love the scriptures, to delight in them, and to realize that in them are the answers to most of the problems besetting this great nation today.

"America continues to be shaken by rising crime, widespread permissiveness, and the breakdown of far too many marriages and homes.

"One positive way to combat these destructive forces is to lead our youth into a new appreciation of the scriptures.

A local representative for the Mormon Church in this area, Elder Kent Memmott, explained the reasons for the Church's support of National Bible Week commenting, "Our Church places great emphasis towards studying the scriptures. They provide us with a guideline to personal happiness which endures. The Church believes the Bible to be the word of God and has long encouraged its members to study the divine truths therein."

Elder Kraig Lundeberg, his companion from Salt Lake City, Utah remarked, "Our support included personal contact with many individuals in the area to encourage the aims of National Bible Week."

Ending Bishops Call for Peace

By UPI

The four year old United Methodist "Bishops Call for Peace and the Self-Development of Peoples" is winding up its work and for once a church agency will go out of existence without great lamentation.

The reason is not that the Bishops' Call was a despised program which everyone is glad to get rid of but rather that it did its job.

That is not to say that no one despised it nor that it brought peace.

"What it has done," said Michael McIntyre, associate coordinator for the Call, "and I say this with an awareness of how presumptious it sounds, is that it has played a John the Baptist role for what is to come."

In all likelihood, when the Methodists meet in General Conference next year, hunger will emerge as the key program emphasis of the 10 million member denomination.

And from McIntyre's point of view, the Bishops's Call for Peace, has been generally successful in preparing the Methodist constituency for that.

"The significant thing about the Bishops' Call," he said, "is that for the first time development was being linked with peace."

This was not just true of the Methodists, he said. That same linkage was being made in Geneva, at the World Council of Churches, in Rome among Roman Catholics and in New York, where many American Protestant bodies are headquartered.

Adopted at the denomination's General Conference in 1972, the Bishops' Call singled out seven enemies of peace such as blind self-interest, economic exploitation, racism, the population explosion and nation worship and contrasted them with the sources and requirements of peace as "the gift of God, a gift that comes when men and women meet the conditions of God."

Much of the period of the Call was characterized by debate over the seemingly conflicting requirements of evangelism and social action, a debate McIntyre characterized as "often innane" because "it was never placed in the decade in which we lived" and because the two camps had "terrible caricatures of each other."

One of the sucesses of the program, he feels, was that the social action types were able to create a measure of trust with bishops who by inclination would have been considered hostile to the program.

"What I"ve seen in four years is that some of the bishops who would be least linked to social action stuff are seeing that we aren't going to bamboozle them and jump all over them, that we aren't out to embarrass the guy," McIntyre said.

Primarily, the Bishops' Call has been an internal church matter rather than an external political movement. Its line of development comes much more out of the World Council of Churches' meeting in Upsala, Sweden in 1968 than out of the American antiwar movement as many people suspect.

"Its agenda is addressed to us inside the church, telling us to get our house in order," he said. "From the beginning we made it clear that we separated partisan politics from politics."

Rare Editions on Display

NEW YORK

The history of Bible publishing tells the whole hisotry of book publishing in capsule. From Gutenberg's first printed book (a Latin Bible) to the American Bible Society's paperback New Testament in Today's English Version (over 50,000,000 copies in circulation), Bible publishing has been setting records.

An overview of this rich history can be seen in a new exhibit that has just opened in the library of the American Bible Society, 61st Street and Broadway, New York. The exhibit features highlights from a rare Bible collection that the Chicago Bible Society transferred to the American Bible Society in July.

"Stars" of the collection are two original pages from a copy of the Bible Johann Gutenberg printed about 1452. This Bible, the first book ever printed with movable type, emulates the beauty of medieval manuscripts. The quality of its printing has never been surpassed.

The exhibit also spotlights the first three Bibles published in America. They are the Bible in the Massachusetts Indian tongue translated and published by John Eliot in 1663; the German Bible published by Christopher Saur in Germantown, Penn., in 1743; and the first American Bible in English, published by Robert Aitken in Philadelphia in 1782. The Aitken Bible, which has been dubbed the "Bible of the Revolution," is the only American Bible ever to receive a Congressional commendation.

Other highlights in the exhibit are first editions of Martin Luther's German translation of 1523 and of the Kings James Version of 1611. A 15th century manuscript Book of Hours from France is illuminated with exquisite miniatures.

The collection was assembled by the Chicago Bible Society through gifts and purchases. The total collection consists of 605 volumes in 43 languages. The oldest book is a manuscript Bible in Latin dating from the 13th century.

Mormons Observed Bible Week

LAKE KATRINE

Calling the scriptures a "treasure of wisdom, inspiration, and practical suggestions for more abundant living," the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, under the direction of Pres. Spencer W. Kimball, pledged its full support to National Bible Week, Nov. 23-30, and issued the following statement:

"Teach your family, beginning with yourself, to love the scriptures, to delight in them, and to realize that in them are the answers to most of the problems besetting this great nation today.

"America continues to be shaken by rising crime, widespread permissiveness, and the breakdown of far too many marriages and homes.

"One positive way to combat these destructive forces is to lead our youth into a new appreciation of the scriptures.

A local representative for the Mormon Church in this area, Elder Kent Memmott, explained the reasons for the Church's support of National Bible Week commenting, "Our Church places great emphasis towards studying the scriptures. They provide us with a guideline to personal happiness which endures. The Church believes the Bible to be the word of God and has long encouraged its members to study the divine truths therein."

Elder Kraig Lundeberg, his companion from Salt Lake City, Utah remarked, "Our support included personal contact with many individuals in the area to encourage the aims of National Bible Week."

Ending Bishops Call for Peace

By UPI

The four year old United Methodist "Bishops Call for Peace and the Self-Development of Peoples" is winding up its work and for once a church agency will go out of existence without great lamentation.

The reason is not that the Bishops' Call was a despised program which everyone is glad to get rid of but rather that it did its job.

That is not to say that no one despised it nor that it brought peace.

"What it has done," said Michael McIntyre, associate coordinator for the Call, "and I say this with an awareness of how presumptious it sounds, is that it has played a John the Baptist role for what is to come."

In all likelihood, when the Methodists meet in General Conference next year, hunger will emerge as the key program emphasis of the 10 million member denomination.

And from McIntyre's point of view, the Bishops's Call for Peace, has been generally successful in preparing the Methodist constituency for that.

"The significant thing about the Bishops' Call," he said, "is that for the first time development was being linked with peace."

This was not just true of the Methodists, he said. That same linkage was being made in Geneva, at the World Council of Churches, in Rome among Roman Catholics and in New York, where many American Protestant bodies are headquartered.

Adopted at the denomination's General Conference in 1972, the Bishops' Call singled out seven enemies of peace such as blind self-interest, economic exploitation, racism, the population explosion and nation worship and contrasted them with the sources and requirements of peace as "the gift of God, a gift that comes when men and women meet the conditions of God."

Much of the period of the Call was characterized by debate over the seemingly conflicting requirements of evangelism and social action, a debate McIntyre characterized as "often innane" because "it was never placed in the decade in which we lived" and because the two camps had "terrible caricatures of each other."

One of the sucesses of the program, he feels, was that the social action types were able to create a measure of trust with bishops who by inclination would have been considered hostile to the program.

"What I've seen in four years is that some of the bishops who would be least linked to social action stuff are seeing that we aren't going to bamboozle them and jump all over them, that we aren't out to embarrass the guy," McIntyre said.

Primarily, the Bishops' Call has been an internal church matter rather than an external political movement. Its line of development comes much more out of the World Council of Churches' meeting in Upsala, Sweden in 1968 than out of the American antiwar movement as many people suspect.

"Its agenda is addressed to us inside the church, telling us to get our house in order," he said. "From the beginning we made it clear that we separated partisan politics from politics."

Rare Editions on Display

NEW YORK

The history of Bible publishing tells the whole hisotry of book publishing in capsule. From Gutenberg's first printed book (a Latin Bible) to the American Bible Society's paperback New Testament in Today's English Version (over 50,000,000 copies in circulation), Bible publishing has been setting records.

An overview of this rich history can be seen in a new exhibit that has just opened in the library of the American Bible Society, 61st Street and Broadway, New York. The exhibit features highlights from a rare Bible collection that the Chicago Bible Society transferred to the American Bible Society in July.

"Stars" of the collection are two original pages from a copy of the Bible Johann Gutenberg printed about 1452. This Bible, the first book ever printed with movable type, emulates the beauty of medieval manuscripts. The quality of its printing has never been surpassed.

The exhibit also spotlights the first three Bibles published in America. They are the Bible in the Massachusetts Indian tongue translated and published by John Eliot in 1663; the German Bible published by Christopher Saur in Germantown, Penn., in 1743; and the first American Bible in English, published by Robert Aitken in Philadelphia in 1782. The Aitken Bible, which has been dubbed the "Bible of the Revolution," is the only American Bible ever to receive a Congressional commendation.

Other highlights in the exhibit are first editions of Martin Luther's German translation of 1523 and of the Kings James Version of 1611. A 15th century manuscript Book of Hours from France is illuminated with exquisite miniatures.

The collection was assembled by the Chicago Bible Society through gifts and purchases. The total collection consists of 605 volumes in 43 languages. The oldest book is a manuscript Bible in Latin dating from the 13th century.

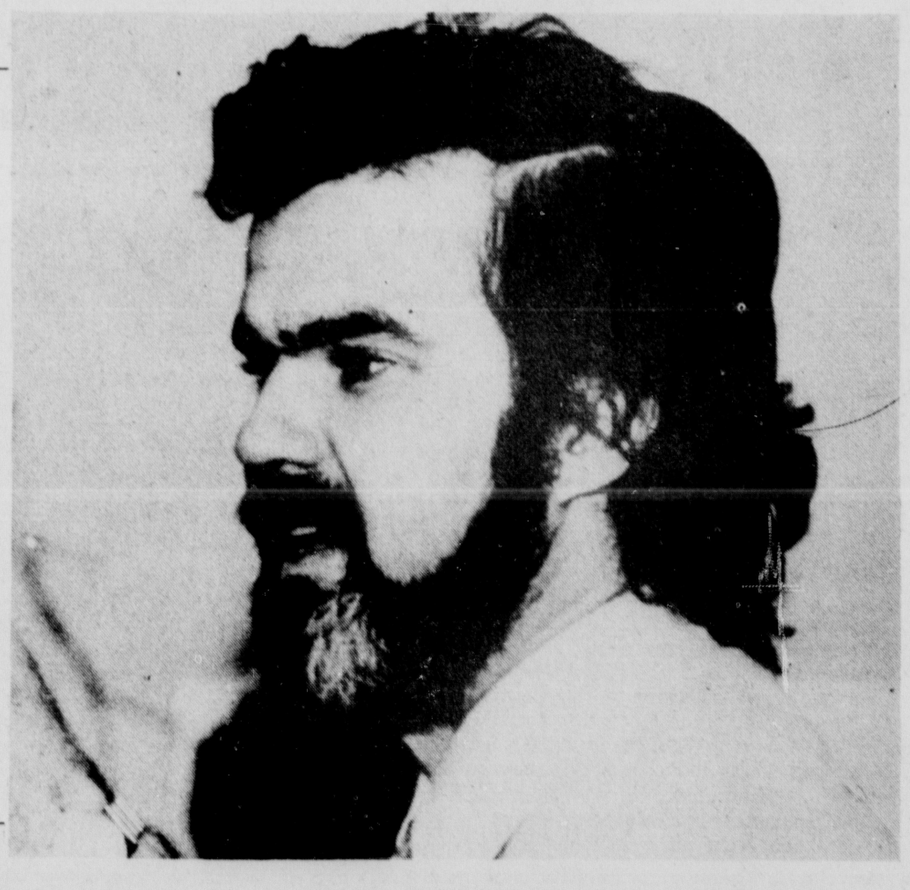

Thanksgiving Finale

KINGSTON

Today concludes the special Thanksgiving Evangelistic week of services at the First Church of the Nazarene, Elmendorf at Wiltwyck, Kingston. The Rev. Stephen Manley, an evangelist from Marion, Ind. has been the featured speaker.

The Rev. Mr. Manley will deliver his final sermons at the 10:45 a.m. and 6 p.m. worship services today.

The Rev. Ronald Keller, pastor of the church also announces that the Rev. Mr. Manley will present another of his "magic object sermons" at the beginning of the 9:45 a.m. Sunday school hour.

Ulster Booters Settle for Fourth Place as Mitchell Scores 3-0 Win

ESSEX, Md.--For the second straight day, Ulster County Community College soccer coach George Vizvary had to say his club was beaten by a superior team.

"I just couldn't get them up today," Vizvary said after the Senators had dropped a 3-0 contest Saturday to Mitchell Junior College of New London, Conn., in the National Junior College Athletic Association tourney. "We felt we'd played for the national championship yesterday, and Mitchell was better."

UCCC, the champion of the Mid Hudson Conference and Region XV, took home fourth place from the NJCAA tournament. Ulster whipped Belleville, Ill., 2-0 in the first round, then lost Friday to top seeded Florissant Valley (Mo.), 3-1 in the semifinals.

Florissant Valley, ranked number one in the NJCAA poll throughout most of the season, captured the national championship Saturday with a 3-0 victory over runnerup Morrisville Ag and Tech.

Ulster's chance for a third place finish never gathered much impetus as the Senators couldn't shake off the after effects of the loss to Flo Valley. Even forward Oscar Rendon, who had all UCCC's goals in the tournament and earned himself a berth on the All-Tournament team, couldn't find the range against Mitchell.

After a scoreless first half, the Connecticut club broke through a lethargic Ulster defense for a goal at 9:58. The outcome was sealed at 30:55 of of the period when a shot rattled off Senator goalie Chris Klinger and was slammed back home by a Mitchell shooter to give the winners a 2-0 lead.

Ulster outshot Mitchell, 25-16 and took nine corner kicks to the winners' three, all to no avail. Klinger made six saves to the 13 stops by Tom Powers.

In many respects, though, it was a successful excursion for the Senator squad. "I think we represented Region XV well," said Vizvary, "and I got nothing but compliments on the team wherever we went."

And for Vizvary himself it was a fulfilling experience. After several close misses, it was the first time his team had ever reached the nationals. "It did feel good to be here. It was an exciting experience. I am proud of this team—we have been in every game we've played. We got a losers' attitude after dropping those games, but even that disappointment lasted only a couple of hours."

Vizvary pointed out that the field was exceptionally strong and that some good teams, like Belleville and Miami-Dade, went home empty handed. Along with fourth place, Ulster wound up with a final record of 10-3-3.

Navy Breezes Past Army, 30-6

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Navy Coach George Welsh said his team "didn't really handle" Army that well Saturday but it looked that way to some 80,000 spectators and a national television audience.

Navy scored in every quarter and its nationally-ranked defense held Army scoreless until midway in the fourth quarter for a 30-6 victory and the Middies' third straight win over the Cadets.

Both Welsh and Army Coach Homer Smith agreed that a blocked punt by Navy defensive end Jeff Hoobler in the second quarter was the key in the 76th annual service academy classic.

Welsh thought it was "a great effort" and Smith said it was "a terrible situation."

After Hoobler blocked the punt on the Army 42 defensive end Bob DeStafney picked up the ball and galloped the distance for the score and a 17-0 lead.

"We didn't have a planned block on," Welsh said. "We were setting up for a return and he just made a great effort."

Smith said, "we got off to a terrible start with three misplays early and never could recover. That blocked punt created a terrible situation."

Navy's Chet Moeller, the outstanding rover back and allAmerica candidate, said the blocked punt got Army "down a little more than it got us up."

Placekicker Larry Muczynski broke two school records and fullback Bob Jackson scored two touchdowns in the Navy rout which gave Welsh his third straight win in the rivalry without a loss.

It was the first time Army had scored against his team in three years.

Muczynski, the backup kicker before the season started, booted three field goals and had three extra points to tie a team record set in 1924 for most points scored by a kicker in the Army-Navy game.

Navy, with a rugged defense that was ranked third in the nation and No. 1 in the East, dominated the listless game played at John F. Kennedy Stadium before 81,576 fans and a national television audience.

Jackson, a senior from nearby Lindenwold, N.J., gained 133 yards to become Navy's No. 2 all-time rusher with 1,667 yards. He scored on two, two-yard runs —one in the second quarter and the other in the fourth quarter which gave Navy a 30-0 lead.

Army's only score came in the same period on a 58-yard, 10-play drive after kick returner Jeff Washington gave them -good field position with a 32y a r d run back. Army sophomore quarterback Leamon Hall went over from the one.

After a 3-0 first quarter lead on a 27-yard field goal by Muczynski, Navy broke the game open with a 17-point second quarter outburst.

Jackson scored his first TD after Bob DeStafney recovered a fumbled punt by Army's Phil Macklin on the Cadet 16.

It was the third straight year that Jackson scored the first touchdown in the annual rivalry.

Later DeStafney galloped 42 yards for a touchdown with a punt blocked by Jeff Hoobler.

Then Navy on the running of Jackson and Gerry Goodwin, who also rushed for over 100 yards, marched from the Middie 18 to the Army 13. There the drive stalled and Muczynski kicked a 31-yarder.

His third field goal was a 28-yarder in the third period and it was his 12th of the season breaking an academy record set by Greg Mather in 1961.

He also had 63 points by kicking for the season breaking the record of 55 also set by Mather.

The game was played in bright and fair weather but the crowd was the smallest in the 37 years the game has been played in the 100,000 seat Kennedy Stadium.

Alabama Wraps Up SEC, 28-0

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Fourth-ranked Alabama won its fifth straight Southeastern Conference title Saturday but the victory held a "sad note" for Coach Paul "Bear" Bryant.

The 28-0 loss marked the end of 25 years of Auburn coaching for Bryant's crosstate rival, Ralph "Shug" Jordan, who closed out his career as Auburn's head coach.

"On somewhat of a sad note, Coach Jordan's last game had to be one of the best games we've ever played," said Bryant.

Alabama had 430 offensive yards to only 144 for Auburn and 22 first downs to 13 for the Tigers.

The Sugar Bowl-bound Crimson Tide led by only 7-0 at the half and Jordan, who will coach in the All-American Bowl next month in Tampa, Fla., said he thought the Tigers would come back and win. "But they had complete control of us after a little while," Jordan said.

Auburn, which had been considered an early favorite in the SEC race, finished the season with a 3-6-2 record, the Tigers' worst season since 1952, Jordan's second year as head coach, when they finished 2-8-0.

"I don't think I'll ever get over this season. It'll be with me as long as I live," said the 65-year-old Jordan.

"I'd like to rectify it, but of course that's impossible."

Senior quarterback Richard Todd led the Tide by passing for two touchdowns and running for two more before a Legion Field crowd of 63,500 and a national television audience.

Alabama, which faces Penn State in the Sugar Bowl New Year's Eve, made all its touchdowns on long scoring drives directed by Todd. They covered distances of 84, 77, 56 and 80 yards.

The Tide, performing before a national TV audience and 63,500 fans in Legi,n Field, drove from its own 16 in 10 plays the second time it got the ball with Todd hitting tight end Jerry Brown with a 17-yard pass for the touchdown, and the Tide led at the half 7-0

Early in the third period Todd moved Alabama 77 yards in 10 plays and scored on a run that covered 33 of the 91 yards he gained rushing during the day.

Minutes later defensive back Tyrone King intercepted a pass by Auburn quarterback Phil Gargis on the Alabama 34. Todd moved the Tide 56 yards in seven plays and the 6-2 senior quarterback carried the ball in from the 14.

Todd passed 29 yards to split end Ozzie Newsome with 6:52 left in the game for Alabama's fourth touchdown. That score, coming on an 80-yard drive in nine plays, ran to 16 the number of touchdowns Todd produced this season.

Danny Ridgeway kicked four extra points for Alabama.

Auburn's Neil O'Donoghue attempted a 44-yard field goal in the fourth period but failed to put Auburn on the board.

Auburn's only other serious scoring drive was interrupted in the third period by King's pass interception.

Alabama fullback Johnny Davis, a 6-1, 220-pound sophomore, led all rushers with 100 yards in 18 carries.

Ithaca, Boston College Win

Rutgers Stuns Syracuse, 21-10

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (UPI) — Sophomore quarterback Jeff Rebholz connected on a 41-yard touchdown pass to Mark Twitty and cornerback Hank Jenkins returned an intercepted pass 59 yards for another score in the last quarter Saturday to spark Rutgers to a 21-10 upset victory over Syracuse.

The Scarlet Knights' nationally sixth-ranked defense held Syracuse to just 117 yards total offense but needed those two last quarter scores to upend the Orangemen. Rutgers' triumph was its seventh in a row and ninth in 11 games, the team's best record since 1961 when the Scarlet Knights went undefeated. Syracuse finished at 6-5.

A blocked punt by Tim Moresco and the ensuing recovery in the end zone by defensive tackle Brian Winters had staked Syracuse to a 10-7 lead midway through the third period, and things looked grim for Rutgers when a pair of long marches by the Scarlet Knights died inside the Syracuse 20.

Finally, after Rutgers' defense had again persisted, the Scarlet pieced together a smooth 10-play, 80-yard scoring drive.

All-East fullback Curt Edwards registered 19 of his game total 149 yards and also recorded a third-down pass reception to keep the home squad on the move.

Rebholz, inserted in the starting lineup when Rutgers began its seven-game win streak, then whipped a squareout pass to split end Twitty, who danced along the sidelines before breaking the play for a 41-yard TD with 6:34 left in the game.

The Orangemen tried desparately to catch up, but three passes by Jim Donoghue were intercepted, two by free saftey Bob Davis, and the last by Jenkins, who returned it 59 yards for a TD.

Rutgers had capitalized on a second quarter Jenkins punt return to take a 7-0 lead when Mike Fisher crashed in from the 11-yard line.

Syracuse's only offensive effort of the day followed, and it was culminated by a 42-yard field goal by David Jacobs.

Ithaca Tops Widener

ITHACA, N.Y. (UPI) — Led by the rushing of quarterback Jerry Boyes and running back Dave Pitzer, Ithaca stopped Widener College's running game to score a 23-14 victory Saturday and earn a second straight trip to the NCAA Division III football championship.

Ithaca next week meets Wittenberg College, which defeated Millsaps College 55-22 Saturday, in the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl in Phenix City, Ala. Last year, the Bombers lost to Central of Iowa, 10-8, in the Stagg Bowl.

Widener, which led Division III schools in rushing this year with 3,382 yards in 10 games, was held to only 138 yards by the Bombers defense.

The game was close, at 16-14, with two minutes left in the game, but Ithaca iced the win when Pitzer scored on a twoyard dash. Dave Piper's extra point kick put the game out of reach.

Boyes, who netted 153 yards in 21 carries, dashed three yards into the end zone for Ithaca's first score in the first period after cornerback Tony Mars recovered a Pioneer funble on the Widener 32 yard line.

Ithaca took a 13-0 lead in the first minute of the second period as Pitzer, who ran for 73 yards in the game, plowed over from two yards out to cap a long drive. The extra point kick was blocked.

Ithaca was plagued by penalties, drawing nine for 114 yards.

BC Downs Holy Cross

WORCESTER, Mass. (UPI) — Quarterback Mike Kruczek ran for a short touchdown and passed for another Saturday as Boston College built a 17-0 first period lead then weathered a late Holy Cross surge to down the Crusaders 24-10 in the 71st meeting of the two teams.

Vanderbilt Edges Vols

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Mark Adams kicked an 18-yard field goal in the fourth period Saturday to give Vanderbilt a 17-14 triumph over Tennessee for the Commodores first victory over the Vols in 11 years.

Graham Hill Dies in Air Crash

LONDON (UPI) — Graham Hill, former world automobile racing champion, was killed late Saturday in a private plane crash that also took the lives of five associates, police said.

The twin-engine plane, owned by Hill, had flown from Marseilles, southern France, when it crashed in fog on a golf course at Barnet, north London.

Police said the plane was bound for nearby Elstree airport. All six on board were killed.

A spokeswoman for Scotland Yard said Hill's death could not be confirmed because not all of the bodies from the crash were immediately identifiable. But she said Hill was on the list of the plane's occupants.

Hill won the World Formula One drivers championship in 1962 and 1968 and was the only man to have won the World Championship, the Indianapolis 500 and the Le Mans 24-hour sports car classic.

The 46-year-old racing legend retired earlier this year after 176 Grand Prix races—more than any driver ever achieved.

Hill, England's most successful driver, saw auto racing change its image from an openshirted, devil-may-care amateur sport to a thoroughly professional multi-million dollar business.

During his career Hill saw the death of more than a dozen of his closest colleagues on the track and he himself cheated death in 1969 when he crashed at more than 100 mph during the U.S. Grand Prix at Watkins Glen, smashing both his legs.

The doctors who said he would never race again admitted their amazement when six months later he was helped off his crutches into the cockpit of his car for the South African Grand Prix.

He never managed to recapture the speed that made him champion before the accident but it was not until earlier this year, after 174 Grand Prix', that he retired at the age of 46 to run his own Formula One team.

Hill was born Feb 15, 1929 in London but did not learn to drive a car until he was 24. It was on a motorcycle that he had his first serious accident at the age of 21, breaking his hip and leaving his left leg shorter than his right

"Once I knew how to drive, I had to race. There was nothing else in the world at that time," Hill said.

He talked his way into a job as a mechanic with Lotus in 1955 and three years later was given a drive for them. But the early Lotuses were fragile and his successes were minimal.

He switched to BRM in 1960 and two years later became the first Briton to win the world championship in an all-British car. Hill's precise style and his efforts to learn a circuit and set his car up for it paid off time and again.

Hill's helmet with its checkered band representing the London Rowing Club (he stroked its crew to victory in Henley's Grand Challenge Cup in 1953) became a familiar sight on tracks throughout the world.

His list of successes became hard to match. He won the Monaco Grand Prix five times and collected his richest prize in 1966 when he drove a Lola-Ford to victory at Indy. Ironically, he used his winnings to buy a light plane which he then used to fly whenever possible

When he won Le Mans in 1972 he became the first man to complete auto racing's "triple crown".

In all he competed in more than 700 major races, winning 14 Grands Prix and more than 50 other events. His grim determination and single-mindedness on the track were matched by his quick wit off it, making him one of auto racing's most popular drivers on three continents.

Hill is survived by his wife Bette and children Brigitte, Damon and Samantha

More Surgery for Bobby Orr

BOSTON (UPI) — Bobby Orr underwent the fifth operation on his left knee in seven years Saturday and will be lost to the Boston Bruins for seven to eight weeks.

"Surgery was completed at noon and his condition is very good," said Dr. Carter Rowe, who performed th3 surgery at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Rowe said hockey's highest scoring defenseman suffered a "torn lateral meniscus, which is a cartilage removed from his left knee. The estimated time of recovery is seven to eight weeks."

Comment from team officials was not immediately available.

Orr had been scheduled to be examined at the hospital after he complained of constant pain in the knee on Friday. There were rumors of further knee surgery when Orr was unexpectedly admitted to the hospital.

The NHL superstar got off the plane at Logan International Airport just before the team left for Chicago Friday to play the Black Hawks. Orr, who has underg9ne five knee operations, four on the left knee over the past seven years, underwent the most recent operation Sept. 20. He did not join the team until Nov. 8.

Coach Don Cherry said Orr told him on the plane of a persistent pain over the knee. "As soon as he spoke to me, I told him the wisest thing to do was to stay in Boston and have it examined by Dr Rowe," Cherry said in a telephone conversation from Chicago Friday. "He won't play against the Black Hawks and we'll have to wait and see what the doctor says."

A team spokesman said Rowe examined Orr Friday and planned "a more extensive examination" Saturday.

In the first 12 games, without Orr, the Bruins compiled a 5-5-2 mark. In the 10 games since his return (and the addition of Brad Park and Jean Ratelle), the Bruins have recorded a 6-13 mark and have been unbeaten in their last nine games

Orr has had five goals and 13 assists since returning.

The last time Orr went under the knife, Rowe removed bone chips and calcium wedged between the femur and tibia bones of the left knee

Muczynski, the backup kicker before the season started, booted three field goals and had three extra points to tie a team record set in 1924 for most points scored by a kicker in the Army-Navy game.

Navy, with a rugged defense that was ranked third in the nation and No. 1 in the East, dominated the listless game played at John F. Kennedy Stadium before 81,576 fans and a national television audience.

Jackson, a senior from nearby Lindenwold, N.J., gained 133 yards to become Navy's No. 2 all-time rusher with 1,667 yards. He scored on two, two-yard runs —one in the second quarter and the other in the fourth quarter which gave Navy a 30-0 lead.

Army's only score came in the same period on a 58-yard, 10-play drive after kick returner Jeff Washington gave them -good field position with a 32y a r d run back. Army sophomore quarterback Leamon Hall went over from the one.

After a 3-0 first quarter lead on a 27-yard field goal by Muczynski, Navy broke the game open with a 17-point second quarter outburst.

Jackson scored his first TD after Bob DeStafney recovered a fumbled punt by Army's Phil Macklin on the Cadet 16.

It was the third straight year that Jackson scored the first touchdown in the annual rivalry.

Later DeStafney galloped 42 yards for a touchdown with a punt blocked by Jeff Hoobler.

Then Navy on the running of Jackson and Gerry Goodwin, who also rushed for over 100 yards, marched from the Middie 18 to the Army 13. There the drive stalled and Muczynski kicked a 31-yarder.

His third field goal was a 28-yarder in the third period and it was his 12th of the season breaking an academy record set by Greg Mather in 1961.

He also had 63 points by kicking for the season breaking the record of 55 also set by Mather.

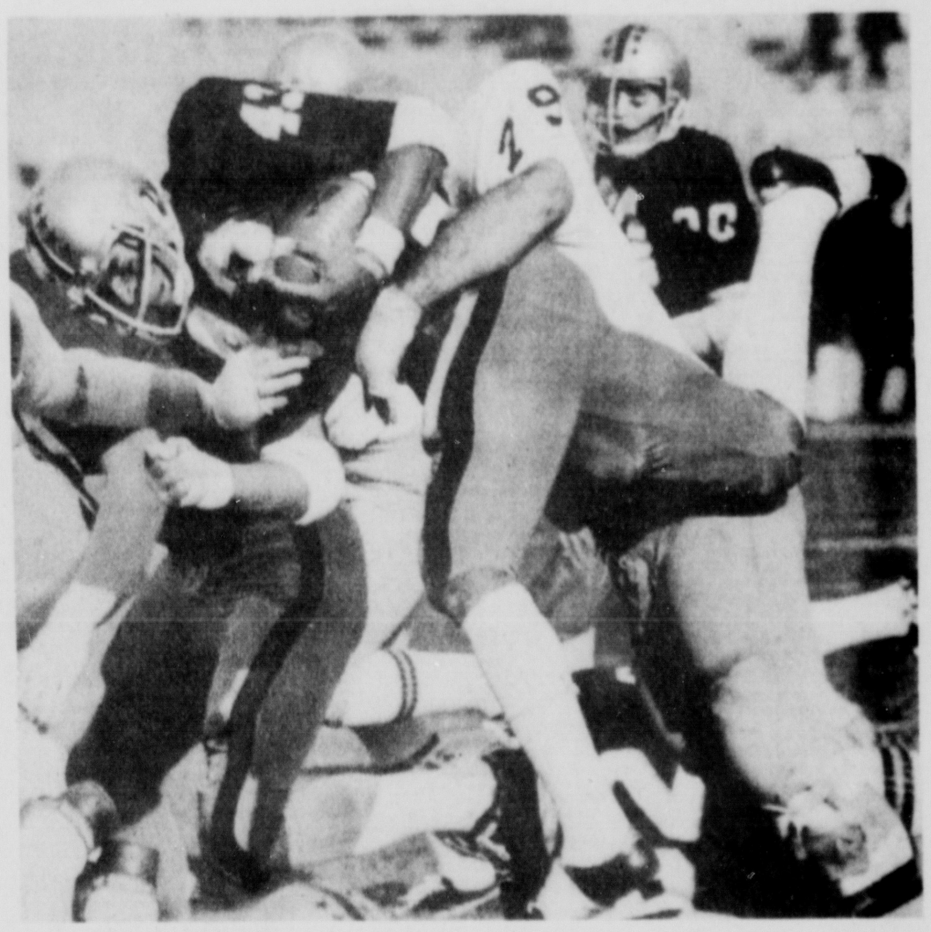

The game was played in bright and fair weather but the crowd was the smallest in the 37 years the game has been played in the 100,000 seat Kennedy Stadium.

Alabama Wraps Up SEC, 28-0

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Fourth-ranked Alabama won its fifth straight Southeastern Conference title Saturday but the victory held a "sad note" for Coach Paul "Bear" Bryant.

The 28-0 loss marked the end of 25 years of Auburn coaching for Bryant's cross-state rival, Ralph "Shug" Jordan, who closed out his career as Auburn's head coach.

"On somewhat of a sad note, Coach Jordan's last game had to be one of the best games we've ever played," said Bryant.

Alabama had 430 offensive yards to only 144 for Auburn and 22 first downs to 13 for the Tigers.

The Sugar Bowl-bound Crimson Tide led by only 7-0 at the half and Jordan, who will coach in the All-American Bowl next month in Tampa, Fla., said he thought the Tigers would come back and win. "But they had complete control of us after a little while," Jordan said.

Auburn, which had been considered an early favorite in the SEC race, finished the season with a 3-6-2 record, the Tigers' worst season since 1952, Jordan's second year as head coach, when they finished 2-8-0.

"I don't think I'll ever get over this season. It'll be with me as long as I live," said the 65-year-old Jordan.

"I'd like to rectify it, but of course that's impossible."

Senior quarterback Richard Todd led the Tide by passing for two touchdowns and running for two more before a Legion Field crowd of 63,500 and a national television audience.

Alabama, which faces Penn State in the Sugar Bowl New Year's Eve, made all its touchdowns on long scoring drives directed by Todd. They covered distances of 84, 77, 56 and 80 yards.

The Tide, performing before a national TV audience and 63,500 fans in Legi,n Field, drove from its own 16 in 10 plays the second time it got the ball with Todd hitting tight end Jerry Brown with a 17-yard pass for the touchdown, and the Tide led at the half 7-0.

Early in the third period Todd moved Alabama 77 yards in 10 plays and scored on a run that covered 33 of the 91 yards he gained rushing during the day.

Minutes later defensive back Tyrone King intercepted a pass by Auburn quarterback Phil Gargis on the Alabama 34. Todd moved the Tide 56 yards in seven plays and the 6-2 senior quarterback carried the ball in from the 14.

Todd passed 29 yards to split end Ozzie Newsome with 6:52 left in the game for Alabama's fourth touchdown. That score, coming on an 80-yard drive in nine plays, ran to 16 the number of touchdowns Todd produced this season.

Danny Ridgeway kicked four extra points for Alabama.

Auburn's Neil O'Donoghue attempted a 44-yard field goal in the fourth period but failed to put Auburn on the board.

Auburn's only other serious scoring drive was interrupted in the third period by King's pass interception.

Alabama fullback Johnny Davis, a 6-1, 220-pound sophomore, led all rushers with 100 yards in 18 carries.

Graham Hill Dies in Air Crash

LONDON (UPI) — Graham Hill, former world automobile racing champion, was killed late Saturday in a private plane crash that also took the lives of five associates, police said.

The twin-engine plane, owned by Hill, had flown from Marseilles, southern France, when it crashed in fog on a golf course at Barnet, north London.

Police said the plane was bound for nearby Elstree airport. All six on board were killed.

A spokeswoman for Scotland Yard said Hill's death could not be confirmed because not all of the bodies from the crash were immediately identifiable. But she said Hill was on the list of the plane's occupants.

Hill won the World Formula One drivers championship in 1962 and 1968 and was the only man to have won the World Championship, the Indianapolis 500 and the Le Mans 24-hour sports car classic.

The 46-year-old racing legend retired earlier this year after 176 Grand Prix races—more than any driver ever achieved.

Hill, England's most successful driver, saw auto racing change its image from an openshirted, devil-may-care amateur sport to a thoroughly professional multi-million dollar business.

During his career Hill saw the death of more than a dozen of his closest colleagues on the track and he himself cheated death in 1969 when he crashed at more than 100 mph during the U.S. Grand Prix at Watkins Glen, smashing both his legs.

GRAHAM HILL

The doctors who said he would never race again admitted their amazement when six months later he was helped off his crutches into the cockpit of his car for the South African Grand Prix.

He never managed to recapture the speed that made him champion before the accident but it was not until earlier this year, after 174 Grand Prix', that he retired at the age of 46 to run his own Formula One team.

Hill was born Feb. 15, 1929 in London but did not learn to drive a car until he was 24. It was on a motorcycle that he had his first serious accident at the age of 21, breaking his hip and leaving his left leg shorter than his right.

"Once I knew how to drive, I had to race. There was nothing else in the world at that time," Hill said.

He talked his way into a job as a mechanic with Lotus in 1955 and three years later was given a drive for them. But the early Lotuses were fragile and his successes were minimal.

He switched to BRM in 1960 and two years later became the first Briton to win the world championship in an all-British car. Hill's precise style and his efforts to learn a circuit and set his car up for it paid off time and again.

Hill's helmet with its checkered band representing the London Rowing Club (he stroked its crew to victory in Henley's Grand Challenge Cup in 1953) became a familiar sight on tracks throughout the world.

His list of successes became hard to match. He won the Monaco Grand Prix five times and collected his richest prize in 1966 when he drove a Lola-Ford to victory at Indy. Ironically, he used his winnings to buy a light plane which he then used to fly whenever possible.

When he won Le Mans in 1972 he became the first man to complete auto racing's "triple crown".

In all he competed in more than 700 major races, winning 14 Grands Prix and more than 50 other events. His grim determination and single-mindedness on the track were matched by his quick wit off it, making him one of auto racing's most popular drivers on three continents.

Hill is survived by his wife Bette and children Brigitte, Damon and Samantha.

Rutgers Stuns Syracuse, 21-10

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (UPI) — Sophomore quarterback Jeff Rebholz connected on a 41-yard touchdown pass to Mark Twitty and cornerback Hank Jenkins returned an intercepted pass 59 yards for another score in the last quarter Saturday to spark Rutgers to a 21-10 upset victory over Syracuse.

The Scarlet Knights' nationally sixth-ranked defense held Syracuse to just 117 yards total offense but needed those two last quarter scores to upend the Orangemen. Rutgers' triumph was its seventh in a row and ninth in 11 games, the team's best record since 1961 when the Scarlet Knights went undefeated. Syracuse finished at 6-5.

A blocked punt by Tim Moresco and the ensuing recovery in the end zone by defensive tackle Brian Winters had staked Syracuse to a 10-7 lead midway through the third period, and things looked grim for Rutgers when a pair of long marches by the Scarlet Knights died inside the Syracuse 20.

Finally, after Rutgers' defense had again persisted, the Scarlet pieced together a smooth 10-play, 80-yard scoring drive.

All-East fullback Curt Edwards registered 19 of his game total 149 yards and also recorded a third-down pass reception to keep the home squad on the move.

Rebholz, inserted in the starting lineup when Rutgers began its seven-game win streak, then whipped a squareout pass to split end Twitty, who danced along the sidelines before breaking the play for a 41-yard TD with 6:34 left in the game.

The Orangemen tried desparately to catch up, but three passes by Jim Donoghue were intercepted, two by free saftey Bob Davis, and the last by Jenkins, who returned it 59 yards for a TD.

Rutgers had capitalized on a second quarter Jenkins punt return to take a 7-0 lead when Mike Fisher crashed in from the 11-yard line.

Syracuse's only offensive effort of the day followed, and it was culminated by a 42-yard field goal by David Jacobs.

Ithaca Tops Widener

ITHACA, N.Y. (UPI) — Led by the rushing of quarterback Jerry Boyes and running back Dave Pitzer, Ithaca stopped Widener College's running game to score a 23-14 victory Saturday and earn a second straight trip to the NCAA Division III football championship.

Ithaca next week meets Wittenberg College, which defeated Millsaps College 55-22 Saturday, in the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl in Phenix City, Ala. Last year, the Bombers lost to Central of Iowa, 10-8, in the Stagg Bowl.

Widener, which led Division III schools in rushing this year with 3,382 yards in 10 games, was held to only 138 yards by the Bombers defense.

The game was close, at 16-14, with two minutes left in the game, but Ithaca iced the win when Pitzer scored on a twoyard dash. Dave Piper's extra point kick put the game out of reach.

Boyes, who netted 153 yards in 21 carries, dashed three yards into the end zone for Ithaca's first score in the first period after cornerback Tony Mars recovered a Pioneer funble on the Widener 32 yard line.

Ithaca took a 13-0 lead in the first minute of the second period as Pitzer, who ran for 73 yards in the game, plowed over from two yards out to cap a long drive. The extra point kick was blocked.

Ithaca was plagued by penalties, drawing nine for 114 yards.

BC Downs Holy Cross

WORCESTER, Mass. (UPI) — Quarterback Mike Kruczek ran for a short touchdown and passed for another Saturday as Boston College built a 17-0 first period lead then weathered a late Holy Cross surge to down the Crusaders 24-10 in the 71st meeting of the two teams.

Vanderbilt Edges Vols

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Mark Adams kicked an 18-yard field goal in the fourth period Saturday to give Vanderbilt a 17-14 triumph over Tennessee for the Commodores first victory over the Vols in 11 years.

More Surgery for Bobby Orr

BOSTON (UPI) — Bobby Orr underwent the fifth operation on his left knee in seven years Saturday and will be lost to the Boston Bruins for seven to eight weeks.

"Surgery was completed at noon and his condition is very good," said Dr. Carter Rowe, who performed th3 surgery at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Rowe said hockey's highest scoring defenseman suffered a "torn lateral meniscus, which is a cartilage removed from his left knee. The estimated time of recovery is seven to eight weeks."

Comment from team officials was not immediately available.

Orr had been scheduled to be examined at the hospital after he complained of constant pain in the knee on Friday. There were rumors of further knee surgery when Orr was unexpectedly admitted to the hospital.

The NHL superstar got off the plane at Logan International Airport just before the team left for Chicago Friday to play the Black Hawks. Orr, who has underg9ne five knee operations, four on the left knee over the past seven years, underwent the most recent operation Sept. 20. He did not join the team until Nov. 8.

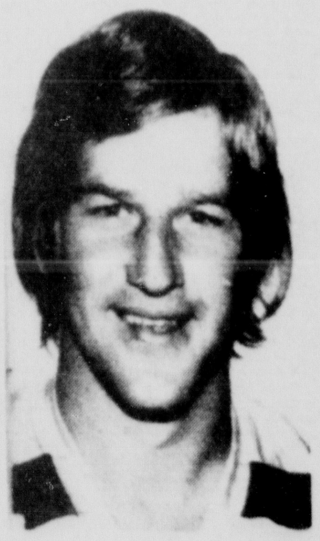

Coach Don Cherry said Orr told him on the plane of a persistent pain over the knee. "As soon as he spoke to me, I told him the wisest thing to do was to stay in Boston and have it examined by Dr. Rowe," Cherry said in a telephone conversation from Chicago Friday. "He won't play against the Black Hawks and we'll have to wait and see what the doctor says."

A team spokesman said Rowe examined Orr Friday and planned "a more extensive examination" Saturday.

In the first 12 games, without Orr, the Bruins compiled a 5-5-2 mark. In the 10 games since his return (and the addition of Brad Park and Jean Ratelle), the Bruins have recorded a 6-13 mark and have been unbeaten in their last nine games.

Orr has had five goals and 13 assists since returning.

The last time Orr went under the knife, Rowe removed bone chips and calcium wedged between the femur and tibia bones of the left knee.

New Paltz State Beaten, 90-63

MANHATTAN

A veteran New Paltz State basketball team opened its season Saturday night against Pace College hoping its experience would make up for its lack of size. It didn't, and coach Joe Donovan's Hawks came out of the starting gate a 90-63 loser.

The battle of the boards was an uphill fight for New Paltz. Unfortunately, the referees were watching. Pace shooters took 44 shots from the foul line and made 28 of them. The Hawks, on the other hand, were nine of 14 from the line, and that 17 point differential was a big part of the final score.

The rest of the difference was provided by Bernie Simons, Pace's 6-1 sharpshooter who found the range for a game high 33 points. Only Bob Irish and Ron Domanski reached double figures for New Paltz, and their combined output just matched Simons'.

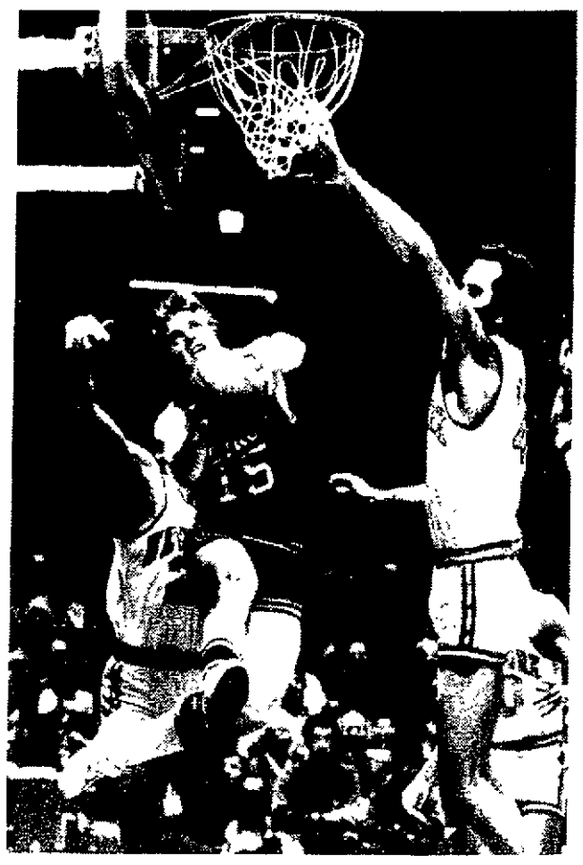

After a slow start by both squads in the game, Pace began opening up late in the first half. The count was 40-28 at the intermission, and the hosts cruised home from there.

New Paltz will attempt to even its record Wednesday with a visit to North Adams State.

Pistons' John Mengelt (15) makes his way through Knicks' Bill Bradley (L) and Neal Walk during Saturday night's game at Madison Square Garden. Detroit won, 115-110. (UPI)

Lanier, Porter Lead Pistons Over Knicks

NEW YORK (UPI) — Bob Lanier's rebounding, layups and successful hook shots brought him 32 points and Kevin Porter's drives through the Knicks' defense netted 23 points Saturday night as the Detroit Pistons defeated New York 115-110.

New York chopped a 13-point deficit down to four in the last quarter, 100-96, only to have Lanier score seven successive points to give Detroit a needed cushion—107-98--as the Knicks came back with 10 quick points of their own. Goals by Bradley and Jim Barnett led the late Knicks' surge that made it close, 111-108, with 1-½ minutes to go.

Walt Frazier, with 23 points, and Spencer Haywood, with 20, led the Knicks, who trailed at halftime 59-57.

Cavs Dump Sonics

RICHFIELD, Ohio (UPI) — Jim Chones and Campy Russell set personal NBA highs of 29 and 27 points Saturday night in leading the Cleveland Cavaliers to a 124-108 victory over the Seattle SuperSonics.

After the Sonics grabbed an early 12-4 lead, the Cavs reeled off 10 straight points and were never headed in rolling to their highest point total of the season.

Chones, who hit on 12 of 22 from the field, started at center but moved to strong forward in the second period when newly acquired Nate Thurmond took over the pivot.

Austin Carr also entered the game at this point and the trio helped put 33 points on the scoreboard as the Cavs rolled to a 65-49 halftime lead.

Irish Cagers Win; Maryland In Romp

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (UPI) — All-American Adrian Dantley, with 25 points, led Notre Dame to a 90-61 victory over Kent State Saturday in the season's basketball opener for both teams.

Pulling away midway in the second half, the Irish showed a balanced scoring drive with five of its players in double figures and forward Toby Knight leading all with a gamehigh 13 rebounds and 14 points. Cortez Brown with 19 and Jim Collins with 16 led the Kent State attack.

Notre Dame led only 38-33 at half time, but with Dantley hitting on seven of eight field goal attempts in that span, they increased their lead without difficulty. * * *

Terps Win Big

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (UPI) — All-America John Lucas and Steve Sheppard combined for 52 points to lead fifth-ranked Maryland to a record-tying 127-84 rout over East Carolina Saturday night.

Sheppard, a junior forward, scored 18 of his 28 points in the first half, dazzling the Pirates with both his shooting and defensive work. Lucas had 13 of his 24 points in the second half as Maryland raced from a 64-41 halftime lead and maintained a comfortable margin the rest of the way.

The Terps tied a school record for most points in a game, matching their 1972 output against Brown.

The game was close for the first 13 minutes with the Terps clinging to a 30-27 lead.

Varsity Triumphs

STONE RIDGE

The Ulster County Community College basketball team made its Senate Gym debut Saturday night with the school's annual Alumni Game. The varsity took an 86-79 victory.

A balanced attack by the Senators' starting five and a good contribution from subs Jeff Port and Ray Younger produced the triumph. The alumni offered the 1-2 punch of Chris Cummings and Ike Chestnut, and while those former UCCC stars collected 56 points between them, it was not enough to hold back the current crop of Senators.

Rachid Walker, Joe McCall and Herman all hit 14 points, Phil Blount added 13, and Younger and Port each came off the bench to drop 10 more apiece. The varsity had its seven point lead by halftime and maintained it to the finish.

Cummings, a '75 graduate, cut loose for 31 markers to lead all scorers. Chestnut, a member of the '73-'74 Ulster teams, dumped in 27.

Ulster will open its regular season Monday night at home against Mid Hudson Conference opponent Dutchess CC.

Bad Night for Rangers As Penguins Roll, 8-3

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — The Pittsburgh Penguins outshot the New York Rangers 24-9 in the opening period, scoring three goals, and went on to defeat the visitors 8-3 Saturday night.

The Penguins got the first 11 shots before the Rangers tallied on their first shot, a deflection by Phil Esposito.

Lowell MacDonald and Ron Schock had opened the scoring for Pittsburgh and Esposito's goal made it 2-1.

After Denny Owchar scored his second of the year for the Penguins, Billy Fairbairn scored for New York with less than two minutes left in the first period to make the score 3-2.

Chuck Arnason and Jean Pronovost widened the gap to 5-2 with second period goals, and the Penguins put the game away in the last period on goals by Vic Hadfield, Bob Kelly and Pronovost.

Pronovost's two goals gave him 12 for the month, a new Pittsburgh record.

Jerry Holland of the Rangers scored their final goal early in the final period.

The Penguins now have a four-game winning streak, another club record.

Parise, Westfall Spark Islanders to 8-2 Rout

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (UPI) — J.P. Parise scored two goals and Ed Westfall added a goal and three assists Saturday night when the New York Islanders routed the St. Louis Blues 8-2.

Westfall opened the scoring at 11:33 of the first period when he took a centering pass from Jude Drouin and slipped it behind St. Louis goalie Ed Johnston. Johnston had replaced starter Gilles Gratton, who left the game in the opening minutes with a bruised right elbow.

Clark Gillies, Parise and Drouin tallied for the Islanders in the second period, offsetting a lone Blues' score by Jerry Butler. The period was highlighted by a brawl at 18:38 which started when Islanders' Garry Howatt accidentally hit Barclay Plager over the head with his stick, an infraction which was missed by referee Bruce Hood.

Denis Potvin, returning from an ankle injury, Bill MacMillan, Parise and Bob Nystrom added third period tallies for New York while Red Berenson beat Islander goalie Glenn Resch for the final St. Louis goal late in the period.

Grimsley Faces Charges

BOSTON (UPI) — Baltimore Oriole pitcher Ross Grimsley will be summoned to face assault charges stemming from an incident at Fenway Park earlier this year which injured a Pembroke youth.

Grimsley was ordered charged with assault with a dangerous weapon late Wednesday by Special District Court Justice John C. Cratsley, after arguments were heard from lawyers representing David Manning Jr., 17.

Manning charged he was struck by a baseball thrown into the stands by Grimsley on Sept. 16. The youth said he suffered an eye injury which hospitalized him for seven days.

Grimsley, who was warming up in the bullpen, allegedly became angry at heckling he was receiving from fans, and threw the ball into the stands.

The pitcher denied the charge and said he accidentally threw the ball into the stands when his catcher left his position. Grimsley said the ball went through a wire mesh screen and struck Manning in the eye.

Telly's Pop Cal Winner

SAN MATEO, Calif. (UPI) — Telly's Pop, a strong running gelding owned by actor Telly Savalas and producer Howard Koch, became the first winner of the Western Triple Crown for 2-year-olds Saturday with an impressive 1½-length victory in the $100,000 added California Juvenile Stakes.

Francisco Mena kept Telly's Pop off the pace until the final turn when he rallied him into the lead and the son of Bold Combatant pulled ahead all the way to the wire for his fifth victory in six career starts.

Bold Impulse, ridden by Donald Pierce, also rallied to grab second by another 1-¼ lengths over outsider Double Dealer in the field of 12 2-yearolds.

Marist Girls Lose

Iona College defeated Marist College, 80-14, in a girls basketball game Saturday. Anne Kiele led Iona with 19 points. Eileen Gregg had 8 for Marist.

New Paltz State Beaten, 90-63

MANHATTAN

A veteran New Paltz State basketball team opened its season Saturday night against Pace College hoping its experience would make up for its lack of size. It didn't, and coach Joe Donovan's Hawks came out of the starting gate a 90-63 loser.

The battle of the boards was an uphill fight for New Paltz. Unfortunately, the referees were watching. Pace shooters took 44 shots from the foul line and made 28 of them. The Hawks, on the other hand, were nine of 14 from the line, and that 17 point differential was a big part of the final score.

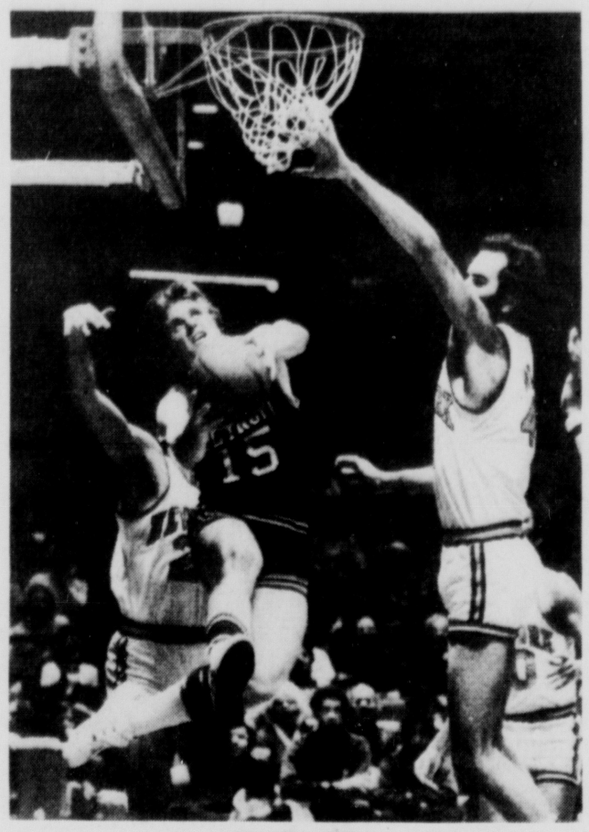

The rest of the difference was provided by Bernie Simons, Pace's 6-1 sharpshooter who found the range for a game high 33 points. Only Bob Irish and Ron Domanski reached double figures for New Paltz, and their combined output just matched Simons'.

After a show start by both squads in the game, Pace began opening up late in the first half. The count was 40-28 at the intermission, and the hosts cruised home from there.

New Paltz will attempt to even its record Wednesday with a visit to North Adams State.

Joe Garfield has that quixotic streak in him that defies rationalization. He is firmly convinced that sooner or later professional boxing can become a monthly feature in Kingston, We wish him well.

By every standard, the Nov. 23 card at the Municipal Auditorium was a standout. Domenico Monaco and Luis Vega staged a bristling headliner and the six-bout card featured three knockouts, a couple by the TKO route.

If the two cards presented by Garfield in 1975—in April and November—furnished any clues that the sports public of Kingston is ready to support boxing, we missed them.

The April card drew heavy support from Poughkeepsie, otherwise it would have been a complete bomb. With no Dutchess County fighter on the Nov. card, the Dutchess contingent was conspicuous by its absence. The paid crowd was around 600 far below expectations.

Next to baseball, the manly art of scrabling ears has always been our No. 2 spectator sport. Nobody wants to see boxing flourish in Kingston more than we do, but not at the expense of a blood bath for an honest and sincere man like Joe Garfield.

There is only one possible solution—get a "name" boxer to headline the proected Jan. 23 show. But name fighters cost money and the Municipal Auditorium has limited seating capacity. Scaling the house at $6 for ringside and $4 general admission is not the solution. Would you expect area fans to go for a $10 ringside seat for anything but a "name" fighter?

There are good club fighters looking for work, but these "good fighters" are known only in the trade. The names cannot be translated into local boxoffice, for the simple reason that only a handful of fans in a given locality would be "in the know." That's a point that Joe Garfield seems to miss.

It is a commentary on our times that such monumental fakery as professional wrestling can pack the Municipal Auditorium with a minimum of publicity, while boxing goes begging. There is no question about the entertainment value of wrestling with its timeless Grecian theme of hero vs. villain, boxing can't touch it, either in Kingston or Madison Square Garden where capacity turnouts of 23,000-plus show up regularly when Bruno Sammartino does his glorious act of the beleagured hero who always emerges triumphant at the last second.

Bob Snyder, a sportswriter on the Syracuse Herald-American staff, recently penned a moving tribute to the late Mike Bond, a Saugerties High School graduate who became one of Ithaca College's best football players. Mike Bond's life was snuffed out recently in a fatal auto accident.

Mike Bond's natural athletic ability was limited, Snyder wrote. The Saugerties native was only 5-9, 175. Still, he was a two-year starter at cornerback, had made two interceptions and averaged 15.5 yards returning kickoffs this fall. These statistics are not eye-catching. And now they're meaningless.

Mike Bond, the man, was something else. His jersey hangs limply in the Ithaca College dressing room. . . No. 31. But he left a legacy of respect and good will that will endure as long as football is played at Ithaca College.

Ithaca lost to Central Iowa 10-8 in the finals of the NCAA Division III championshop last fall at Phenix City and it produced the single blemish on a magnificent record. But it was a blemish that gnawed at Mike Bond for nearly a year.

"He personally blamed himself for the loss," said Gary Bucci, who teamed with Bond as starting cornerbacks. "Mike was the closest man to the receiver who caught the big bomb, a perfectly thrown 50-yarder setting up the winning TD for Central Iowa.

"We roomed together on the road and he confided in me a lot," said Bucci. "After that game, he kept wondering, 'Why am i always the One?' "

If Bond's Ithaca teammates had their way, his jersey would hang forever in the dressing room. As Bucci put it, "Mike was an all-out hustler on the football field. Bondy never took a blow during practice, like most fellows do now and then. He wouldn't hang around long after victory. He was always with his girl (Andrea). None of us who played football with Mike Bond will ever forget him."

Bobby Heins of Liberty is faced with a momentous decision as he anticipates the 1976 PGA Tour. Does he try once more to regain his tour card by subjecting himself to the ordeal of another 108-hole qualifying tournament. Or does he face up to reality and resign himself to becoming a club pro and compete in sectional tournaments?

After two dismal years on tour, Bobby missed the qualifying cut at 1975 qualifying round by seven shots at Disneyland in Florida. The tournament is for new players seeking a PBA Tour card and for tour members who have lost their tour status.

Ed Byman missed his card by one shot, carding 438 for the 108 holes on rounds of 75, 75, 74, 72, 71, 77. Jerry Impellatiere, former assistant to Bill Reilly at Wiltwyck Golf Club, failed miserably to make the 54-hole cut. His scores were 80-80-78.

Heins who says his game was seriously affected after a crash diet, earned only $895 and finished 228th on the 1975 official earnings list.

The PGA Tour Division sets two basic guidelines for determining who keeps their playing card:

First Year Player: Now must earn at least $5,000 (it was $3,000) enter at least 15 tournaments, qualify for at least 50 per cent of those entered and make the 36-hole cut in at least 30 per cent of those entered.

Second Year Player (Hein's status)—Must earn at least $7,000 a year, plus fulfill the other three requirements. Otherwise, their playing privileges are terminated. And that's where Bobby Heins stands today.

Rose Bowl-Bound Bruins Look Forward to OSU

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — On paper, the Ohio State-UCLA Rose Bowl rematch appears to be a mismatch. But the Bruins don't see it that way.

The Bruins are surprisingly confident at the prospect of facing the unbeaten and No. 1-ranked Buckeyes again. Ohio State manhandled the Pacific-8 co-champions 41-20 here Oct. 4.

And UCLA turned the ball over to University of Southern California nine times — eight of them on fumbles — Friday night in a Rose Bowl-clinching 25-22 victory over the University of Southern California.

"Hopefully, we've got the mistakes out of our system," said Dick Vermeil, the former Los Angeles Rams' assistant who is taking the Bruins to Pasadena in his second season as their head coach.

"We'll do better against Ohio State this time," said Cliff Frazier, the Bruins' standout 6-5½, 254-pound nose guard. "We won't let them score 41 points on us.

"Our defense is much stronger this time. We had a will in the USC game. They could have put wings on and we still would have stopped them."

"It's going to be easier against Ohio State the second time," said John Sciarra, UCLA's senior quarterback who is just 26 yards away from becoming his school's No. 2 total offense performer of all time.

"We know how to attack them better and we'll be a lot more confident. Things are going to be a lot different in the Rose Bowl."

Sciarra and the rest of the Bruins are hoping history repeats itself at Pasadena. The 1965 Bruins, coached by Tommy Prothro, lost their opener to Michigan State 13-3 but upset the Spartans 14-12 in the Rose Bowl.

"We have to redeem ourselves in the Rose Bowl," added Wendell Tyler, UCLA's crack halfback. "We have something to work for."

Tyler, a 5-10, 185-pound speedster, revealed he will have his cracked left wrist placed in a cast for two weeks Monday. He suffered the wrist injury in the Bruins' fifth game of the season at Stanford.

"But that's no excuse for my fumbles against USC," he added quickly.

Tyler fumbled four times, three of them on pitchouts from Sciarra, against the Trojans. However, he scored on a sizzling 57-yard run and rushed for 130 yards to give him 1,216 for the season, a UCLA record.

He's carried the ball 187 times for a 6.5 yard average.

As J.D. Morgan, the UCLA athletic director, was congratulating the Bruins following their Friday night win, Sciarra walked up to him and alluded to Morgan's Saturday morning flight to St. Louis for the big Saturday night UCLA-Indiana basketball game.

"Fly Cloud Nine," advised Sciarra. "I understand it'll get you there real quick."

Tennis Stars Set For Season Finale

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — The climax to the 1975 tennis season begins today when the year's eight most successful players compete in the $100,000 Masters tournament.

Favorite to win the title for a second straight year is Argentina's Guillermo Vilas, who has already won the Commercial Union Grand Prix Circuit, composed of all the world's major tournaments.

The men rated the best chance to wrest the title from Vilas are Arthur Ashe of Miami and Bjoen Borg of Sweden.

Ashe, who has the ability to raise his game for the big tournament, won this yar's WCT and Wimbledon championships and the Masters title would complete a sweep of three of the world's most prestigious crowns.

Borg, who will have the added incentive of playing before his home crowd at the Royal Tennis Hall, has been the most consistent winner over Vilas for the iast two years but has had trouble defeating his other opponents as regularly.

The eight players have been divided into two groups with the semifinals featuring the winner of one group against the runner-up of the other.

The Blue group contains Vilas, Borg, Raul Ramirez of Mexico and Harold Solomon of the Silver Spring, Md., winner of the final grand prix circuit event in South Africa. The White group has Ashe, U.S. Open champion Manuel Orantes of Spain, Ilie Nastase of Romania and Italy's Adriano Panatta, winner of the Swedish Open here earlier this month.

The one man missing from the line-up is America's Jimmy Connors, the maverick of tennis, who qualified but withdrew from the tournament because of a "previous doubles engagement" with Chris Evert.

The eight-day tournament will be held on a comparatively fast indoor synthetic turf and will be worth $40,000 to the winner and $20,000 to the runner-up.

Four matches will open the tournament today. Vilas' first opponent will be Solomon, Borg will meet Ramirez, Orantes will face Panatta and Ashe clashes with Nastase.

Green Up by Three In Japan Golf

MIYAZAKI, Japan (UPI) — Hubert Green birdied four of the first five holes Saturday en route to a 67 and a three-stroke lead over Larry Ziegler after three rounds of the $200,000 Dunlop Phoenix golf tournament.

Green, 28, of Bay Point, Fla., has led after each of the three rounds. His current 12-under-par 204 on the 7,012 yard par 72 Phoenix Country Club course made him the odds-on choice to win the $40,000 top prize.

Larry Ziegler of St. Louis also shot a third round 67 for a 207 and three strokes in front of third place Rik Massengale of Charlotte, Texas, who shot a 72.

Defending champion Johnny Miller of Napa, Calif., the pre-tournament favorite, had putting trouble for the third straight round and could do no better than a two over par 36-38--74. He had a three over par 219 and was in a 28th place tie with 13 others, including Don January, who had a 72, Ireneo Legaspi of the Philippines, who skied to a five over par 37-40--77 and Kuo Chi-hsioung, one of Taiwan's top players who had a 71.

Lu Liang-huan of Taiwan, who was runner-up to Miller last year, fired a four under par 68 for a five under par 211 and a seventh place tie with Benson "Mac" McLendon of Birmingham, Ala., who shot his second three under par 69. Tom Kite of Austin, Texas, shot an even par 72 and was alone in ninth place with a four under par 212.

Green, who mentioned Thursday that he had made eight or nine visits to Japan since 1972 and felt that it was about time he won a tournament in Japan, said "I am very happy right now but I won't predict a victory. I'm going to play each hole carefully Sunday. I'm not going to play against Ziegler or anybody else. I am going to play against myself. I am going to play the best I can and even if I will lose, I will be satisfied."

Green said he lost some concentration Saturday because of his comfortable lead and hit a shot with a perfect lie into a banker and took a bogey on the easy par five seventh hole where there have been many birdies.

"I also was too relaxed on the par three 11th hole," Green said. "I hit a 20 foot putt six feet short off the pin but managed to make par."

Olympic Site On Time?

MONTREAL (UPI) — Dr. Victor Goldbloom, Quebec government minister in charge of the 1976 Olympics construction and financing, said Saturday he was "feeling good" about the possibility of having all installations ready for the July 17 opening of the games.

"I think we can carry it off," said Goldbloom, who is also the province's municipal affairs minister.

Goldbloom, who became responsible for the games two weeks ago when Quebec City took over from the city of Montreal, said the first priority of the newly-appointed Olympic installations board would be to simplify construction of the east-end site.

Goldbloom said in a radio interview the government took over the financially troubled games because progress was "on a treadmill.

"But I feel we can clear away the complexities and confusion," he said.

Goldbloom said he was prepared to keep in contact with International Olympic Committee President Lord Killanin through weekly telephone calls and written reports.

But the minister said there was no indication that the Lausanne, Switzerland-based IOC planned to hand over the games to Mexico City, despite a Mexican official's announcement this week that the city was prepared to host the games.

Goldbloom said European press reports of police raids conducted during the week in connection with an alleged fraud at the $90 million Olympic Village were "rather negative and the summaries I saw went far beyond the actual facts.

"It's my feeling the police investigation does not touch the work that I have to do and I do not intend to let it affect it," he said.

Quebec Provincial Police said Friday it could take up to three months before arrests, if any, are made as a result of the more than thirty raids at the homes and offices of Olympic contractors and the heads of the Olympic Organizing Committee (COJO).

Reports that the alleged fraud could amount to $30 million were denied by police as erroneous and exaggerated.

Canada Surprises Mexico In Davis Cup Doubles

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Canada surprised the home-crowd Saturday by beating Mexico in the Davis Cup doubles 2-6, 6-4, 6-4, 6-8, 6-4 to keep alive its hopes of winning the series and playing the United States in the next round.

"I think our chances are looking okay," Canadian Davis Cup Captain Don Fontana said after watching Canada's No. 1, Tony Bardsley and Rejean Genois, beat Luis Baraldi and Roberto Chavez in a three-hour thriller.

Bardsley, left out of Friday's two singles—which Canada lost—because Fontana thought he was out of form, was the stronger of the two Canadians and amazed the 2,500 crowd at the Chapultepec Sports Club with some powerful serving.

It is only the second time Mexican officials can remember that Canada has won the doubles in about 30 years of Davis Cup play between the two nations.

In today's singles Rejean Genois, of Loretteville, near Quebec City, will play Marcelo Lara and Dale Power will face Joaquin Loyo Mayo.

Canada started badly, losing the first set 6-2. The Canadians broke Chavez's service in the third game, but Genois dropped his in the fourth and Bardsley his in the sixth.

They fought back, winning the second and third sets by breaking Chavez's weak service each time.

The Canadians should have clinched the match in the fourth set. Chavez lost his service in the third game. But in the eighth, with victory almost at hand, Genois lost his service. He dropped it again in the 14th game and Mexico tied the match at two sets all.

Genois and Bardsley took the fifth set and the match after breaking Baraldi's service in the ninth game.

Four matches will open the tournament today. Vilas' first opponent will be Solomon, Borg will meet Ramirez, Orantes will face Panatta and Ashe clashes with Nastase.

Green Up by Three In Japan Golf

MIYAZAKI, Japan (UPI) — Hubert Green birdied four of the first five holes Saturday en route to a 67 and a three-stroke lead over Larry Ziegler after three rounds of the $200,000 Dunlop Phoenix golf tournament.

Green, 28, of Bay Point, Fla., has led after each of the three rounds. His current 12-under-par 204 on the 7,012 yard par 72 Phoenix Country Club course made him the odds-on choice to win the $40,000 top prize.

Larry Ziegler of St. Louis also shot a third round 67 for a 207 and three strokes in front of third place Rik Massengale of Charlotte, Texas, who shot a 72.

Defending champion Johnny Miller of Napa, Calif., the pre-tournament favorite, had putting trouble for the third straight round and could do no better than a two over par 36-38--74. He had a three over par 219 and was in a 28th place tie with 13 others, including Don January, who had a 72, Ireneo Legaspi of the Philippines, who skied to a five over par 37-40--77 and Kuo Chi-hsioung, one of Taiwan's top players who had a 71.

Lu Liang-huan of Taiwan, who was runner-up to Miller last year, fired a four under par 68 for a five under par 211 and a seventh place tie with Benson "Mac" McLendon of Birmingham, Ala., who shot his second three under par 69. Tom Kite of Austin, Texas, shot an even par 72 and was alone in ninth place with a four under par 212.

Green, who mentioned Thursday that he had made eight or nine visits to Japan since 1972 and felt that it was about time he won a tournament in Japan, said "I am very happy right now but I won't predict a victory. I'm going to play each hole carefully Sunday. I'm not going to play against Ziegler or anybody else. I am going to play against myself. I am going to play the best I can and even if I will lose, I will be satisfied."

Green said he lost some concentration Saturday because of his comfortable lead and hit a shot with a perfect lie into a banker and took a bogey on the easy par five seventh hole where there have been many birdies.

"I also was too relaxed on the par three 11th hole," Green said. "I hit a 20 foot putt six feet short off the pin but managed to make par."

Olympic Site On Time?

MONTREAL (UPI) — Dr. Victor Goldbloom, Quebec government minister in charge of the 1976 Olympics construction and financing, said Saturday he was "feeling good" about the possibility of having all installations ready for the July 17 opening of the games.

"I think we can carry it off," said Goldbloom, who is also the province's municipal affairs minister.

Goldbloom, who became responsible for the games two weeks ago when Quebec City took over from the city of Montreal, said the first priority of the newly-appointed Olympic installations board would be to simplify construction of the east-end site.

Goldbloom said in a radio interview the government took over the financially troubled games because progress was "on a treadmill.

"But I feel we can clear away the complexities and confusion," he said.

Goldbloom said he was prepared to keep in contact with International Olympic Committee President Lord Killanin through weekly telephone calls and written reports.

But the minister said there was no indication that the Lausanne, Switzerland-based IOC planned to hand over the games to Mexico City, despite a Mexican official's announcement this week that the city was prepared to host the games.

Goldbloom said European press reports of police raids conducted during the week in connection with an alleged fraud at the $90 million Olympic Village were "rather negative and the summaries I saw went far beyond the actual facts.

"It's my feeling the police investigation does not touch the work that I have to do and I do not intend to let it affect it," he said.

Quebec Provincial Police said Friday it could take up to three months before arrests, if any, are made as a result of the more than thirty raids at the homes and offices of Olympic contractors and the heads of the Olympic Organizing Committee (COJO).

Reports that the alleged fraud could amount to $30 million were denied by police as erroneous and exaggerated.

Canada Surprises Mexico In Davis Cup Doubles

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Canada surprised the home-crowd Saturday by beating Mexico in the Davis Cup doubles 2-6, 6-4, 6-4, 6-8, 6-4 to keep alive its hopes of winning the series and playing the United States in the next round.

"I think our chances are looking okay," Canadian Davis Cup Captain Don Fontana said after watching Canada's No. 1, Tony Bardsley and Rejean Genois, beat Luis Baraldi and Roberto Chavez in a three-hour thriller.

Bardsley, left out of Friday's two singles—which Canada lost—because Fontana thought he was out of form, was the stronger of the two Canadians and amazed the 2,500 crowd at the Chapultepec Sports Club with some powerful serving.

It is only the second time Mexican officials can remember that Canada has won the doubles in about 30 years of Davis Cup play between the two nations.

In today's singles Rejean Genois, of Loretteville, near Quebec City, will play Marcelo Lara and Dale Power will face Joaquin Loyo Mayo.

Canada started badly, losing the first set 6-2. The Canadians broke Chavez's service in the third game, but Genois dropped his in the fourth and Bardsley his in the sixth.

They fought back, winning the second and third sets by breaking Chavez's weak service each time.

The Canadians should have clinched the match in the fourth set. Chavez lost his service in the third game. But in the eighth, with victory almost at hand, Genois lost his service. He dropped it again in the 14th game and Mexico tied the match at two sets all.

Genois and Bardsley took the fifth set and the match after breaking Baraldi's service in the ninth game.

THE 'NEW' YANKEE STADIUM

Pontiac's Fabric Roof Revives 'Dome Fever'

NEW YORK (UPI) — A new stadium at Pontiac, Mich., cost $55.7 million, including an airsupported dome.

An old stadium, New York's Yankee Stadium, so far has cost $57 million just to refurbish. Part of the reconstruction was tearing off the old grandstand roof to eliminate pillars that obstructed the view from many seats. There will be better vision but no roof—or dome—when the Yankees are welcomed back next April after two years of sharing domeless Shea Stadium with the Mets. And from an original estimate of $24 million, the refurbishing cost may run as high as $66 million.

Projects such as the rebuilding of Yankee Stadium, new Astrodomes, Superdomes or Kingdomes of more or less traditional construction may be growing too costly for most potential "buyers." Major sports as well as smaller operators are looking at air-supported fabric domes such as the new 80-000-seat home of the Detroit Lions at Pontiac, Mich., which was brought in on schedule—and within the original budget.

A domed student center at Laverne, Calif., College, the Milligan College Fieldhouse at Johnson City, Tenn., and a student activities center at the University of Santa Clara (Calif.), set the stage for the larger Pontiac Pondome.

Other air-supported domes are being built or considered at the Universities of Northern Iowa, Eastern Michigan, South Dakota and Minnesota, Bayamon Stadium in Puerto Rico and the famed Aztec Stadium at Mexico City, according to Robert B. Kline of the OwensCorning Fiberglas Corp.

Even a severe weather setback hasn't dimmed the enthusiasm of athletic officials at the University of Northern Iowa in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

On Nov. 9, the $7 million UNI-dome Coliseum scheduled for Jan. 1 occupancy was struck by a violent storm, possibly one of the tornadoes sighted in the area at the time. A Fiberglas panel of the dome was ripped in high winds and lightning and the dome collapsed.

"The dome will be back in place in a few days unless there's more snow in the meantime," says Stan Sheriff, athletic director and football coach at Northern Iowa, which reached this year's NCAA Division II playoffs with a 9-2 record and was scheduled to play Western Kentucky in the first round Nov. 29.

"There's snow on the ground now and more is forecast but we still expect to have the Coliseum ready on schedule by Jan. 1. It'll be used for basketball, track, and tennis, as well as other sports, concerts and meetings. Next fall, we'll have a 17,000-seat arena for football, complete with dome and artificial turf, instead of the old open-air 7,500-seater we're using now. When football is over, we'll roll back the turf and conduct other sports on a composition floor."

Dr. David Geiger of New York, project director for the Iowa dome as well as the one at Pontiac, says the completed Pontiac dome already has withstood much higher winds than those recorded at Cedar Falls on Nov. 9. He adds that the fact lightning arrestors and auxiliary electric power had not yet been installed in the Iowa project contributed to the collapse. When the city's power supply went off during the storm, the dome fell in.

"It's doubtful that a traditional roof would have withstood such force," Geiger adds. "And comparable damage to a conventional roof would—in most cases—take months to fix."

"All safety factors including lightning arrestors and auxiliary power are in now," says Sheriff. "When our dome goes up again, it'll be up to stay. There's tremendous enthusiasm for the dome here but I'll admit a few critics came out of the woodwork when it collapsed. If it had been a conventional roof blown away—as happened at East Tennesee State once— they'd have said it's just one of those things.

"Everyone else is delighted at the prospect of the new UNIdome Coliseum. It'll be the only one in the state."

Brockport to Defend SUNYAC Title

ALBANY

The 1975-76 State University of New York Athletic Conference (SUNYAC) basketball race begins this week with several teams set to give defending champion Brockport a run at the title. The eventual champion will earn a berth in the NCAA Division III East Regional Tournament in March. Brockport won the regional in 1975 and went on to finish fourth nationally in Division III.

Gone from coach Mauro Panaggio's 23-5 squad that was 10-1 in conference play are All-Conference guard Mike Panaggio, who graduated, and All-Conference forward Pops McTaw and center Kevin Williams, lost for personal reasons. Key returnees are Panaggio's brother Dan, also an All-SUNYAC choice a year ago, 6-4 forward-center Dale O'Dell, and 6-5 center Steve Simmons. Although Mauro Panaggio terms 1975-76 a rebuilding year, he retains enough talent, plus the addition of several promising newcomers, to rate a contender's role in the pennant race.

Chief threats to the Golden Eagles' repeating as champs figure to be Oneonta and Albany, with several other teams filling "dark horse" slots. Oneonta, 8-3 and tied for third last year, returns nine lettermen, including All-SUNYAC Steve Blackmon, 6-5 center Steve Wolcott, and playmaking guard Kevin Croutier. Coach Don Flewelling's Red Dragons will miss All-Conference Jackie Dalton and Jim Coon, both 1,000-pound career men.

Albany suffered an unexpected loss when its leading scorer and All-Conference representative Ed Johnson failed to return to school. However, Dick Sauers has three starters returning — guards Mike Suprunowicz and Gary Trevett, and forward Bob Audi — from his 9-2 SUNYAC club that handed Brockport its only league defeat. Replacing Johnson and finding a center are the Great Danes' major tasks.

Fredonia finished 7-4 in fifth place a year ago and coach Bill Hughes has four staters returning: 6-4 forward Herb Joyner, the leading scorer on the defense-minded Blue Devils; 6-4 forward Pete Kawiak, 6-3 Jim Hoepfinger, and 6-7 center Jon Quinn. Some may lose their first string roles, however, in the face of challenges from several transfers. Hughes, whose team led Division III in team defense last year (51.4), feels the club lacks speed and size.

Geneseo will sorely miss SUNYAC Most Valuable Player Ed Robota, the Blue Knights' leading scorer and rebounder, and three other starters from its 6-5, sixth-place team of last winter. Coach Tom Pope had an "excellent recruiting year" and hopes the newcomers blend well and quickly with the only returning starter, 6-4 Mark Klein.

Potsdam figures to improve on its rebuilding 6-5 season, since coach Jerry Welsh has eight lettermen back, including three-year starters Tom Hutchinson (6-4) and Tom Eggleston (5-8). He is worried about finding a solid big man and hopes 6-7 junior transfer Rich Davis solves that problem.

John Affleck, wholed Binghamton to 13 victories, most at the school since 1961, lost assist leader Bob Grande and top rebounder Mike Cunningham to graduation from his 5-6 SUNYAC squad. The leading returnees are 6-5 scoring leader Glenn McIver, 6-5 Ken Brann, and 6-0 Kurt Mohney. There are three other lettermen back, also.

Plattsburgh (3-8), Cortland (3-8), New Paltz (1-10), and Ossego (0-11) trailed the pack last season and don't figure to challenge for this year's title, although they may serve as spoilers as the season progresses.

Cortland lost forecourt starters Pete Weishan and Greg Tyler, but has experience at guard. Plattsburgh's extremely-young team of 1974-75 was led by All-SUNYAC Larry Parker, among the conference's top scorers and rebounders as a 6-5 freshman center. New Paltz had a junior, 6-0 Bob Irish, and a sophomore, 6-4 Ron Domanski, as its top offensive threats, but lacked support for them. Oswego depended almost entirely on SUNYAC scoring champion Bob Rich, who graduated, and No. 3 scorer Jim Bason in a lopsided attack. However, coach Bernard Boozer recruited some size and quality which he hopes will start the Lakers on the comeback trail.

Cathy Townsend Captures World Cup Bowling Tourney

MANILA (UPI) — A trip which began with misery for Cathy Townsend of Montreal ended happily Saturday when she captured the World Cup Bowling Championship for women.

It is actually the 11th annual world cup but only the fourth year that women have completed.

It was a storybook ending as Miss Townsend took the coveted title by defeating Hattieann Morrissette of Bermuda in the finals.

Miss Townsend, a 38-year old stenographer, had lost her luggage on her trip to Manila. She had to buy a new bowling ball and bowling shoes, plus clothes to wear during the week.

Everything worked extremely well as the Canadian southpaw was near the top all the way and proved very tough in match game competition during the last three days with a 19-6-1 record. She edged Miss Morrissette, a 33-year old saleswoman, 540-509, in the championship match.

As the Canadian national anthem was played following presentation of the championship trophy, Miss Townsend wept on the victory podium.

The Canadian took the lead in the very first game of the three-game finals and never relented. She won the first game 195-184 and the second 184-144 before losing the third 181-161.

Miss Morrissette had split problems, getting a pair in each of the first two games. A pair of misses in the second game really proved her downfall. Miss Townsend got her only double of the match midway in the second game while her opponent waited until the final two grames of the match for her lone double.

Lesley Potter of Great Britain was third and Jacqueline Coudere of Belgium was fourth in the 29-player competetion that began last Tuesday.

Cale's Goal: Grand National

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Cale yarborough, stock car racing's county commissioner from Timmonsville, S.C., hasn't given up his long-standing goal.

He still wants in the worst way to win a NASCAR Grand National title.

Driving Junior Johnson's Holly Farms-sponsored 1974 Chevrolet, he earned $127,575 and posted three wins in the just-completed 1975 NASCAR season. He's already thinking about 1976.

Yarborough joined the $1 million career winner's club in the Dixie 500 at atlanta Nov. 9.

"That's pretty select company," he said. "I'm very pleased about being able to do it. Of course, I wouldn't mind knowing where that million is.

I certainly don't have it. I think I owe about a million, though.

"For whatever it's worth, I did it quicker than anybody else. Richard Petty took 500 and some races to win a million and I did it in 280 some."

Yarborough, 36, drove in his first Grand National race in 1957 and, except for '71 and '72, has been driving on a full-time basis on the stock car circuit since '63. When he came back to NASCAR racing full time in '73, he announced he was returning to win the Grand National crown.

The 1976 NASCAR season will get under way with the Winston Western 500 at Riverside, Calif., Jan. 18.

"Yeah, I'm still after the title," he said. "It's something I'd like to get at least once. It carriss a lot of prestige and it's probably worth in the neighborhood of $100,000 in prize money and fringe benefits.

"We'll start out at Riverside in January and see what it looks like. If we think we have a shot at it early, we'll make our plans and go for it. It's a real endurance test."

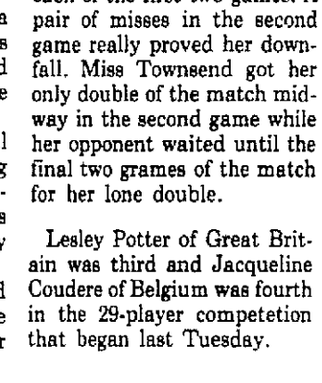

Petty, Mr. Stock Car Racing himself, won his sixth NASCAR championship — and second in a row — this year.

"Richard Petty's quite a race driver," Yarborough said. "He runs a lot of races and that gives him a big edge over the other drivers but you can't take anything away from him. He's one heckuva race driver and one heckuva competitor."

Title Defense For Villaflor

TOKYO (UPI) — World Boxing Association junior lightweight champion Ben Villaflor of the Philippines will defend his title against Morito Kashiwaba of Japan in a 15-round title match here on Jan. 12, the Japan Boxing Commission said Saturday.

Kashiwaba is the WBA's No. 6 junior lightweight contender.

Cathy Townsend Captures World Cup Bowling Tourney

MANILA (UPI) — A trip which began with misery for Cathy Townsend of Montreal ended happily Saturday when she captured the World Cup Bowling Championship for women.

It is actually the 11th annual world cup but only the fourth year that women have completed.

It was a storybook ending as Miss Townsend took the coveted title by defeating Hattieann Morrissette of Bermuda in the finals.

Miss Townsend, a 38-year old stenographer, had lost her luggage on her trip to Manila. She had to buy a new bowling ball and bowling shoes, plus clothes to wear during the week.

Everything worked extremely well as the Canadian southpaw was near the top all the way and proved very tough in match game competition during the last three days with a 19-6-1 record. She edged Miss Morrissette, a 33-year old saleswoman, 540-509, in the championship match.

As the Canadian national anthem was playel following presentation of the championship trophy, Miss Townsend wept on the victory podium.

The Canadian took the lead in the very first game of the three-game finals and never relented. She won the first game 195-184 and the second 184-144 before losing the third 181-161.

Miss Morrissette had split problems, getting a pair in each of the first two games. A pair of misses in the second game really proved her downfall. Miss Townsend got her only double of the match midway in the second game while her opponent waited until the final two grames of the match for her lone double.

Lesley Potter of Great Britain was third and Jacqueline Coudere of Belgium was fourth in the 29-player competetion that began last Tuesday.

Cale's Goal: Grand National

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Cale yarborough, stock car racing's county commissioner from Timmonsville, S.C., hasn't given up his long-standing goal.

He still wants in the worst way to win a NASCAR Grand National title.

Driving Junior Johnson's Holly Farms-sponsored 1974 Chevrolet, he earned $127,575 and posted three wins in the just-completed 1975 NASCAR season. He's already thinking about 1976.

Yarborough joined the $1 million career winner's club in the Dixie 500 at atlanta Nov. 9.

"That's pretty select company," he said. "I'm very pleased about being able to do it. Of course, I wouldn't mind knowing where that million is.

I certainly don't have it. I think I owe about a million, though.

"For whatever it's worth, I did it quicker than anybody else. Richard Petty took 500 and some races to win a million and I did it in 280 some."

Yarborough, 36, drove in his first Grand National race in 1957 and, except for '71 and '72, has been driving on a full-time basis on the stock car circuit since '63. When he came back to NASCAR racing full time in '73, he announced he was returning to win the Grand National crown.

The 1976 NASCAR season will get under way with the Winston Western 500 at Riverside, Calif., Jan. 18.

"Yeah, I'm still after the title," he said. "It's something I'd like to get at least once. It carriss a lot of prestige and it's probably worth in the neighborhood of $100,000 in prize money and fringe benefits.

"We'll start out at Riverside in January and see what it looks like. If we think we have a shot at it early, we'll make our plans and go for it. It's a real endurance test."

Petty, Mr. Stock Car Racing himself, won his sixth NASCAR championship — and second in a row — this year.

"Richard Petty's quite a race driver," Yarborough said. "He runs a lot of races and that gives him a big edge over the other drivers but you can't take anything away from him. He's one heckuva race driver and one heckuva competitor."

Title Defense For Villaflor

TOKYO (UPI) — World Boxing Association junior lightweight champion Ben Villaflor of the Philippines will defend his title against Morito Kashiwaba of Japan in a 15-round title match here on Jan. 12, the Japan Boxing Commission said Saturday.

Kashiwaba is the WBA's No. 6 junior lightweight contender.

Italy's Thoeni Seeks Alpine Sweep

VIENNA—Gustavo Thoeni, Italy's soft-spoken world champion, will be bidding for a unique double whent the alpine ski season gets underway next week.

Thoeni the defending World Cup titlist, has a chance of winning the trophy for the fourth time and combining it with a sweep of all three gold medals at the Winter Olympics, which dominate the season in Innsbruck, Feb. 4-15.

Only Jean-Calude Killy managed the feat before—in 1968—but Theoni, now 24 and at his peak, has the all-round skill to equal the Frenchman's achievement.

The retirement of Austria's Annemarie Moser-Proell, Thoeni's cochampion since 1970, has left the women's field wide open. There is no skier in sight likely to sweep downhill, slalom, and giant slalom.

The Games return to Innsbruck for the second time in 12 years — Denver was awarded them but later turned them down—and there is not one coach among the top skiing nations who doesn't think his skiers won't grab a gold medal in February.

The United States team heads into the season with high hopes despite the powerful competition from the potential leaders—Austria, Italy, and Switzerland. Canada is looking for its best team in years.

A team-by-team rundown shows:

AUSTRIA

The host country hopes to capture the lion's share of Olympic medals on its home runs but will have a hard time in the women's class since there is none to step into the boots of Moser-Proell. Team coach Toni Sailer expects Franz Klammer to win the downhill gold medal but even he will face stronger competition this winter with the return of Switzerland's number one downhiller, Roland Collombin, who was sidelined last season through injuries. Klammer still hopes to win the downhill on the same track where his compatriot Engon Zimmermann took the Olympic gold medal in 1964.

ITALY

Thoeni is aiming at an Olympic gold medal hat-trick obtained so far only to Toni Sailer of Austria in 1956 and by Killy in 1968. Although considered a slalom specialist Thoeni has been working on the downhill since last season and now calls it the most exciting of the three alpine events.

"Thoeni is in top form," sid Italian technical director Mario Cotelli. "He is as complete a skier as Sailer and Killy were. He could do it." It may be Thoeni's last season as an amateur. He has said he would like to try a season with the U.S. professionald in America before ending his career.

SWITZERLAND

The Swiss are expected to field the strongest downhill team with Roland Collombin, Olympic champion Bernard Russi, Walter Vesti, and Phillipe Roux. The Swiss downhillers spent two weeks in Chile in August to prepare for the Olympics. Swiss experts believe they also have good chances in a giant slalom with Heini He mmi and Walter Tresch. On the girl's side, Marie-Therese Nadig, the defending Olympic downhill champion, and Bernadette Zurgriggen are among the favorites in the downhill event while Lise-Marie Morerod, one of the most gifted Swiss girls, could win both the giant and special slalom.

WEST GERMANY

Christian Neutreuther, West German's most successful skier in the past four seasons, carries his country's most solid medal hopes in the slalom event. Neureuther was not at his best in the 1974 world championships at St. Moritz, Switzerland, "But he has been showing good promise in training this winter," said his coach Kund Messman. In the women's class, slalom, ace Christa Zehmeister and allrounder Rose Mittermaier have to be counted among the favorites on a good day. The West Germans started pre-Olympic training at the Rettenbach blacier in the Austrian Oetztal Valley early this season.

CANADA

Canadian skiers have prepared hard for the Olympics in South America during August and in Austria during October. Canadian coaches anticipate the most successful season yet for the national team. "We've been orienting the team towards downhill for the past three years," said men's coach Scott Henderson. "We don't have the resources for specialized slalom training like the other major alpine countries. We have therefore placed almost all our faith in a breakthrough in the downhill event." The Canadian team, now training in Soelden, Austria, is make up of five women and 10 men. Two women—Betsy Clifford and Kathy Kreiner—are previous winners of the World Cup circuit in the past years. Veteran Jim Hunter of Calgary, the 1972 Olympic bronze medal winner in the alpine combined, leads the men's team.

UNITED STATES

The men's team is led by two potential medal contenders: giant slalom specialist Greg Jones, 22, Tahoe City, Cal, and slalom specialist Geoff Bruce, 22, East Corning, N.Y. In the women's team, the top medal hopes are carried by two downhillers—Cindy Nelson, 20, Lutsen, Minn.m and Abbi Fisher, 18, So. Conway, N.H.

Hank Tauber, the U.S. Alpine program director, says, "With the retirement of Austria's Annemarie Moser-Proell, the women's downhill and giant slalom races are open to anyone, including our own Cindy Nelson and Abbi Fisher."

"We have had truly outstanding on-snow training this year," Tauber said. "Now we are about to see the results and I feel we could be headed for one of our best seasons in more than a decade.

"The enthusiasm among the team members is tremendous and the racers believe they can do it—that's what counts," Tauber said.

FRANCE

Fabienne Serrat, the world champion in giant slalom and alpine combined, will be France's strongest contender for a medal as well as for the unofficial title of Olympic beauty queen.

The darkhaired, shapely French girl dominated several of last season's World Cup races in the slalom and giant slalom events. The two French national coaches—Paul Fayolle and Jacky Furno—gathered the two for training in Val D'Isere where the new World Cup season will open next week. In the men's class, France is still far from finding replacements for such outstanding stars as Killy or Jean Noel Augert and Patrick Russell. The Frecnchmen skiers are particularly weak in downhill where Patrice Pellat-Finet, 23, carries their only hopes for a decent placing. Michel Jordan, 19, is another promising talent but far from ranking in the top class.

Ski Camps Set at Belleayre

PINE HILL

Belleayre Mountain Ski Center has announced dates for two Christmas Ski Camps this season. A freestyle camp has been set Dec. 21-22 and a Racing Camp for Dec. 20-23.

Nancy Hoenigman, a crack freestyler and the new freestyle coach at Belleayre, will be in charge of the three-day camp. She will be assisted by an important guest, Tom O'Connor of the Kissing Bridge Ski School. O'Connor has competed in the U.S. and Canadian National freestyle compititions and has been the freestyle director at KB for three years. He is also president of the Eastern Freestyle Association.

Steve Graham will again return with his assistant, Gene McClean, to run the four-day racing camp. Both boys are seniors at St. Lawrence University and have been members of the university ski team for four years.

St. Lawrence ranks in the top three among the inter-collegiate ski racing circuit. During the four days of the camp, participants will be exposed to the fundamentals of basic skiing aids, slalom, giant slalom and downhill, gradually working up to the advanced stages of each event.

The camp will conclude with a giant slalom race on the final day. For further information, interested persons may contact Meg Monell, Ski School director, Belleayre Mt. Ski School, Pine Hill, N.Y. 12465.

OSU's Griffin Again Is Heisman Favorite

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Heisman Trophy, college football's most coveted individual honor, will be presented Tuesday to the outstanding player in the nation and for the first time a previous winner is expected to take home the bronze statue.

Archie Griffin of Ohio State, the 1974 winner, is the favorite to capture the award again. Doc Blanchard, Doak Walker, Vic Janowicz and Roger Staubach also won the Heisman as juniors but the closest any of them came to repeating was a third place finish by Walker in the 1949 voting.

If Griffin is successful in retaining the award, it is unlikely that his margin of victory will be as overwhelming as it was a year ago. Last season Griffin was the top votegetter in each of the five geographical areas of the nation and won by more than 1,100 points over Anthony Davis of Southern California.

Griffin's stiffest competition in this year's balloting is likely to come from running backs Chuck Muncie of California, Ricky Bell of Southern California, Tony Dorsett of Pittsburgh and Joe Washington of Oklahoma. Washington finished third in last year's voting while Dorsett was 13th. Both Bell and Dorsett are juniors.

The winner will be announced at 12 noon EST Tuesday.

Griffin, though less spectacular than a year ago when he rushed for 1,695 yards, was certainly consistent. The 5-foot-9 tailback rushed for more than 100 yards in every game except the final one of the season against Michigan and finished the campaign with 1,357 yards for a 123.4 per game average. He also picked up another 158 yards in pass receptions—not bad on a team that usually regards the forward pass as an implement of the devil.

Bell, Dorsett and Muncie all had better rushing statistics than Griffin. Bell was the nation's leading rusher, averaging better than 170 yards per game; Dorsett finished third with 140.4 yards per contest and Muncie was fourth with 132.7 per game.

Statistically, Muncie and Dorsett also were more versatile than Griffin. Muncie not only rushed for 1,460 yards but added 392 more on pass receptions and scored 15 touchdowns. Dorsett scored 14 TDs, rushed for 1,544 yards, gained 191 yards on pass receptions and logged 105 yards on kickoff returns.

Of the five leading candidates for the Heisman Trophy, Washington's statistics are lowest. But even though the Oklahoma senior averaged considerably less yardage than he did a year ago, he was still a key all-round performer for the Sooners.

Muncie's chances for winning might be hampered by lack of exposure. California came off a two-year NCAA probation this year and Muncie has appeared only once on national television in the last three seasons. Still, his coach, Mike White, has been openly plugging his star for the Heisman Trophy whenever possible.

"If Chuck Muncie isn't a Heisman Trophy winner, then who is?" says White. "I admit I haven't seen them all, but certainly Chuck is the finest allround back I've been associated with. He not only has the physical ability, but he also had great football instinct. He has strong legs to run inside and great speed to go outside. He can catch and throw an adequate pass, too."

Dorsett, who had the season's best single game rushing performance (303 yards against Notre Dame on Nov. 15), has been his own publicity man.

"I definitely think I deserve the Heisman," Dorsett says frankly. "But it's not up to me. I don't vote."

The voting is conducted by the Downtown Athletic Club, sponsors of the award, which tabulates ballots from more than 1,000 registered selectors from across the nation. Every player is eligible, but since the award was orginated in 1935 only two linemen (both ends)— Larry Kelley of Yale (1936) and Leon Hart of Notre Dame (1949)—have won the trophy. Running backs have won the last three years.

Bell, Dorsett and Muncie all had better rushing statistics than Griffin. Bell was the nation's leading rusher, averaging better than 170 yards per game; Dorsett finished third with 140.4 yards per contest and Muncie was fourth with 132.7 per game.

Statistically, Muncie and Dorsett also were more versatile than Griffin. Muncie not only rushed for 1,460 yards but added 392 more on pass receptions and scored 15 touchdowns. Dorsett scored 14 TDs, rushed for 1,544 yards, gained 191 yards on pass receptions and logged 105 yards on kickoff returns.

Of the five leading candidates for the Heisman Trophy, Washington's statistics are lowest. But even though the Oklahoma senior averaged considerably less yardage than he did a year ago, he was still a key all-round performer for the Sooners.

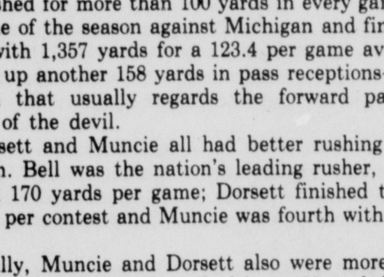

Muncie's chances for winning might be hampered by lack of exposure. California came off a two-year NCAA probation this year and Muncie has appeared only once on national television in the last three seasons. Still, his coach, Mike White, has been openly plugging his star for the Heisman Trophy whenever possible.

"If Chuck Muncie isn't a Heisman Trophy winner, then who is?" says White. "I admit I haven't seen them all, but certainly Chuck is the finest allround back I've been associated with. He not only has the physical ability, but he also had great football instinct. He has strong legs to run inside and great speed to go outside. He can catch and throw an adequate pass, too."

Dorsett, who had the season's best single game rushing performance (303 yards against Notre Dame on Nov. 15), has been his own publicity man.

"I definitely think I deserve the Heisman," Dorsett says frankly. "But it's not up to me. I don't vote."

The voting is conducted by the Downtown Athletic Club, sponsors of the award, which tabulates ballots from more than 1,000 registered selectors from across the nation. Every player is eligible, but since the award was orginated in 1935 only two linemen (both ends)— Larry Kelley of Yale (1936) and Leon Hart of Notre Dame (1949)—have won the trophy. Running backs have won the last three years.

Nine Fighting For Five Spots

The games dwindle down to a precious few but the National Football League playoff contenders sure don't.

With only four games left, only two of the league's eight playoff spots have been settled and three of the remaining division races are three-team dogfights.

The only races settled entering today's action are the National Conference Central and Western Divisions. Los Angeles stopped Detroit 20-0 Thanksgiving Day to wrap up the West and hand unbeaten Minnesota the Central title. Oakland stands a good chance of joining that group today, but other than that it's wide open.

Buffalo upset St. Louis 32-14 Thursday to throw both Eastern races into turmoil. In the American Conference East, Miami leads with a 7-3 record, Buffalo is a half-game back at 6-5 and Baltimore a game behind at 6-4.

In the NFC East, St. Louis holds a slim half-game lead over Dallas. The Cards are 8-3, the Cowboys 7-3 and Washington is still in the picture at 6-4.

In the AFC Central, Pittsburgh holds a one-game lead with its 9-1 record but Cincinnati and Houston are just a step behind at 8-2 and 7-3.

That leaves six clubs battling for the three remaining playoff spots in the AFC and three teams struggling for the two left in the NFC.

Today's major games find Houston at Cincinnati, Atlanta at Oakland, Kansas City at Baltimore, Minnesota at Washington, the New York Giants at Dallas and Pittsburgh at the New York Jets. Elsewhere, Chicago is at Green Bay, New Orleans at Cleveland, San Diego at Denver and San Francisco at Philadelphia. New England is at Miami on Monday night.

The Houston-Cincinnati matchup could be the best of the day The Oilers were stung by their Monday night loss to Pittsburgh and need badly to win in order to remain in contention The Bengals, meanwhile, were rocked quite a bit themselves when they were upset by previously winless Cleveland last week and go into the Houston game without their No. 1 quarterback, Ken Anderson, who is out with a chest injury. John Reaves, obtained from Philadelphia this year, replaces him.

"You have to be able to do the job in adversity or you won't be around," Reaves said. "I've got to prepare this week like never before and give it my best shot. I want to be ready to do the job for this team.

"Ken is the moving strength behind the team. This is Kenny's ball club Nobody knows it better than I do. It's a difficult situation to be in when you're still learning a new system. These people are new to me and I haven't had the opportunity to work with them that much.

"Mentally, I think I've stayed ready to play each game. I think the big thing is the physical part, the timing Kenny said it took him two years to get the offense down. Sure, it's not an easy thing to do, but anything I say is going to sound like excuses and I don't want to make excuses. Houston is such a big game, it's unbelievable.

"We've still got a chance to win the division and it all starts this week I know that if everybody on the team makes up their mind to do it, we can do it."

The Steelers are overwhelming favorites over the Jets and have the luxury of watching their two closest rivals pound away at each other. The strength of this division is measured in the simple fact that the three contending clubs are 17-1 in games outside their own division, with Pittsburgh's early season loss to Buffalo the only blot.

An Oakland victory over Atlanta combined with a Baltimore win over Kansas City would give the Raiders the AFC West title for the fourth straight year A Colt triumph would also put Miami on shaky ground as the Dolphins must finish the season with 41-year-old Earl Morrall replacing the injured Bob Griese at quarterback.

In the NFC East, Dallas can move into a first place tie by beating the Giants and Washington, seemingly out of contention after a second straight overtime loss last week, must stop unbeaten Minnesota to stay in the race

Viking quarterback Fran Tarkenton, who last week broke John Unitas' pass completion record, is just five short of Unitas' mark for career touchdown passes Chuck Foreman leads the NFC in rushing, receiving and touchdowns

There shouldn't be any letup by the clubs who already have clinched. For the first time this season, playoff sites will be determined by best record rather than simply by rotating sites, which should keep teams from coasting once they secure titles

Six members of league champion Onteora High School's soccer team were named today to the All-Ulster County Athletic League squad.

Chosen from Coach Ron Valle's OCS club were goalie Conrad Earnest, fullbacks Bob Berkeley and Bob Mattsen, halfback Matt Earnest, and forwards Jim Stoothoff and Jim Reffelt.

Three New Paltz High School booters and one each from Rondout Valley and Coleman round out the first team honor squad selected by league coaches. From New Paltz are fullback John Hain, halfback Alex Mazur, and forward Bob Durkin. Joe Schell, a forward, is Coleman's representative while Mark Berlanga, a fullback, is the Rondout Valley selection.

Second team picks were goalie Tony Saragnese of New Paltx; fullbacks Tim Rock of New Paltz, Dave Schelbarth of Onteora, Dave Cohen of Fallsburgh, and James Hopkins of Rondout Valley; halfbacks Wayne Schaeffer of Rondout Valley and Steve Pechloff of Coleman; and forwards Jake Liang and Bob Nussbaum of Onteora, Bob Merine of New Paltz, and Dave Rexford of Fallsburgh.

First team goalie Earnest had six shutouts allowing only four goals in 10 league games. Coach Valle calls him "One of the finest keepers in the Hudson Valley."

Berkeley has been an all-league pick all three years the team has been chosen. The junior fullback has excellent skills, speed, and knowledge of the game.

Mattsen was moved from forward to fullback and did an outstanding job. He usually was in charge of keeping the opponents' top offensive performer in check.

Matt Earnest, Conrad's brother, controlled the midfield area for Onteora, playing excellent defense and distributing fine passes on offense.

Reffelt scored one goal and five assists in league play and is considered one of the UCAL's finest playmakers. He is a particularly excellent dribbler.

Stoothoff was chosen all-league for the second straight year. He scored 11 goals and four assists and, according to Valle, possesses one of the most devastating shots in Ulster County."

Durkin was the New Paltz high score in leading the Hugies to a Section Nine playoff berth. He is the son of the former New Paltz State soccer coach.

Mazur, a veteran, and Hain were two of the top defensive performers in the UCAL.

Schell led the offensive charge of Coleman's runner-up club under first year coach Roland Augustine.

Berlanga, a second team pick last year, was the heart of the Rondout defense. "He showed responsibility, leadership, and courage," said RVC coach Andy Lutz. Berlanga is considered a college prospect.

Pacing Mare Has an Eye for Leather Fashions

Christian Dior may have other ideas but leather accessories are very much in style these days for the young ladies in Merritt Dokey's barn at Yonkers Raceway.

One distaff dandy, in particular, has cut some fancy fractions in her leather hobbles. She's Huff N Puff, a six-year-old pacing mare who Dokey terms the "best horse I've ever driven." And, the 36-year-old reinsman from Westland, Mich., has chauffeured some good ones.

With plastic hobbles, the bay bombshell was a dud. With leather hobbles, she exploded into a 1:58.3 pacer.

Here's how Dokey tells it:

"When I purchased Huff N Puff for $12,000 as a 3-year-old everyone laughed. She couldn't handle her speed, making a lot of breaks, and it looked as though she'd never get to the races. Then, to top it off, she broke a sesamoid and had to be turned out.

"When I brought her out as a 4-year-old I changed from plastic to leather hobbles. The plastic ones hadn't given her the support or 'feel' that she needed."

That did it.

Huff N Puff went on to win 11 of 30 starts that year for Dokey and, with a 1:58.3 mark, wound up being voted aged pacing mare of the year.

She's currently one of the headliners in Dokey's 13-horse contingent at the Westchester track, although her recent form is off Dokey says its mental. "A newspaper blew across the track into her leg while she was passing another horse during a race. It frightened her. Now she races scared," Dokey adds.

But that's another story.

Born in Kalamazoo, Mich., Dokey broke into racing as a jockey, both with quarterhorses and thoroughbreds. "I had trouble pushing Myself back from the dinner table or I might still be riding horses," quipped Dokey, relaxing over a cup of coffee in the track cafeteria at Yonkers. After a brief pause, he added: "That's not true, actually I was starving."

Outgrowing his usefulness as a jockey, Dokey went to work for Joe m-Marsh, Jr., one of harness racing's top stars in the mid-West. Dokey credits Marsh for most of his saavy and, in fact, adopted driver's silks (or colors) very similar to that of his former teacher.

Dokey joined Bert James in 1970, giving his career another big boost. Among the better horses he handled for James were Saucy Wave and Jambo Belle.

Moving into New York from the mid-West for the Fall-Winter siege, Dokey explains that he likes the action . . . and money . . . at Yonkers. "When you race here, you've got to be on the move all the time."

A listener volunteered: "I've been watching you race, Merritt, and you look like a terrific competitor."

Sipping his coffee, Dokey looked up and replied: "Thanks, but with seven kids to feed, I've got to be."

Coaches Won't Predict A Jet-Steeler Mismatch

NEW YORK (UPI) — Today's game between the New York Jets and the Pittsburgh Steelers has the look of lambs being led to slaughter but coaches have a way of making even the biggest mismatches sound exciting.

The game pits two teams going in opposite directions The Steelers, 9-1 and leading the American Conference Central Division, have won eight straight games and are rolling along toward another playoff berth and defense of their Super Bowl championship

The Jets, on the other hand, have lost a club record seven games in a row and eight of 10 overall and are last in the AFC East They've allowed the most points in the league—330—are without a true head coach and have been threathened by their fans with picket lines around Shea Stadium for inept performances

The Steelers are 17-point favorites, but to hear the rival coaches talk you'd think they were getting ready for a life and death struggle

"You can't take the Jets too lightly," said Steeler Coach Chuck Noll. "They have good personnel and they're due for a good game. Actually, I think their personnel is better now than when they beat us in the Super Bowl"

The "us" Noll referred to was Baltimore, where he was an assistant coach when the Jets pulled off their Super Bowl III upset. Noll still doesn't quite accept that loss

"There are a lot of factors working in their favor," he added. "We're coming off a Monday night game, a very emotional game, and it's just past the Thanksgiving holiday. We had a similar situation last season around this time and we were upset by Houston."

Ken Shipp, the Jets' interim coach after the firing of Charley Winner two weeks ago, feels it's wrong to count his team out against Pittsburgh

"I saw Pittsburgh Monday night and they looked pretty damn good—in every department," said Shipp, the club's offensive coordinator before being asked to replace Winner.

"But I believe that on any given day one team can beat another and that's the approach we're taking. Someday the ball is going to take the right bounces for us for a change and we're gonna kick somebody's butt. I don't care if they are the world champions—we're going in with the feeling we can win.

"You may think I'm crazy but I think we're gonna give them a helluva game. When I was in New Orleans, we beat Dallas with 15 rookies playing for us and they won the Super Bowl that year If I didn't feel I could do it, I'd get out of coaching I've never gone into a game I didn't think we could win"

The Jets' offensive line has been having problems protecting quarterback Joe Namath this season and will get its stiffest test against the Steeler front four, probably the best in the NFL. Joe Greene, Pittsburgh's star defensive tackle, is questionable with a pinched nerve in his shoulder but Steve Furness has been outstanding all season as a reserve

"We won't hurt Namath," said defensive tackle Ernie Holmes "I'll set him gently down on the ground and tell him, "stay there."'

The Steelers have allowed the fewest points in the league and, offensively, they've been just as awesome. Franco Harris, the No 2 rusher in the NFL behind Buffalo's O.J. Simpson, is steaming toward a third 1,000-yard season and quarterback Terry Bradshaw is playing the best ball of his career

Lynn Swann is developing into one of the premier receivers in the NFL and Pittsburgh will be working today against a decimated secondary. Injuries have forced the Jets to sign three new defensive backs in the last two weeks and coaches are hoping four of them stay healthy enough to walk out against the Steelers

The lone bright spot in the offense has been fullback John Riggins, who bulled his way for 32 yards against St. Louis last week and has 647 yards overall this year

Christian Dior may have other ideas but leather accessories are very much in style these days for the young ladies in Merritt Dokey's barn at Yonkers Raceway.

One distaff dandy, in particular, has cut some fancy fractions in her leather hobbles. She's Huff N Puff, a six-year-old pacing mare who Dokey terms the "best horse I've ever driven." And, the 36-year-old reinsman from Westland, Mich., has chauffeured some good ones.

With plastic hobbles, the bay bombshell was a dud. With leather hobbles, she exploded into a 1:58.3 pacer.

Here's how Dokey tells it:

"When I purchased Huff N Puff for $12,000 as a 3-year-old everyone laughed. She couldn't handle her speed, making a lot of breaks, and it looked as though she'd never get to the races. Then, to top it off, she broke a sesamoid and had to be turned out.

"When I brought her out as a 4-year-old I changed from plastic to leather hobbles. The plastic ones hadn't given her the support or 'feel' that she needed."

That did it.

Huff N Puff went on to win 11 of 30 starts that year for Dokey and, with a 1:58.3 mark, wound up being voted aged pacing mare of the year.

She's currently one of the headliners in Dokey's 13-horse contingent at the Westchester track, although her recent form is off. Dokey says its mental. "A newspaper blew across the track into her leg while she was passing another horse during a race. It frightened her. Now she races scared," Dokey adds.

But that's another story.

Born in Kalamazoo, Mich., Dokey broke into racing as a jockey, both with quarterhorses and thoroughbreds. "I had trouble pushing Myself back from the dinner table or I might still be riding horses," quipped Dokey, relaxing over a cup of coffee in the track cafeteria at Yonkers. After a brief pause, he added: "That's not true, actually I was starving."

Outgrowing his usefulness as a jockey, Dokey went to work for Joe m-Marsh, Jr., one of harness racing's top stars in the mid-West. Dokey credits Marsh for most of his saavy and, in fact, adopted driver's silks (or colors) very similar to that of his former teacher.

Dokey joined Bert James in 1970, giving his career another big boost. Among the better horses he handled for James were Saucy Wave and Jambo Belle.

Moving into New York from the mid-West for the Fall-Winter siege, Dokey explains that he likes the action . . . and money . . . at Yonkers. "When you race here, you've got to be on the move all the time."

A listener volunteered: "I've been watching you race, Merritt, and you look like a terrific competitor."

Little Helper

Coaches Won't Predict A Jet-Steeler Mismatch

NEW YORK (UPI) — Today's game between the New York Jets and the Pittsburgh Steelers has the look of lambs being led to slaughter but coaches have a way of making even the biggest mismatches sound exciting.

The game pits two teams going in opposite directions. The Steelers, 9-1 and leading the American Conference Central Division, have won eight straight games and are rolling along toward another playoff berth and defense of their Super Bowl championship.

The Jets, on the other hand, have lost a club record seven games in a row and eight of 10 overall and are last in the AFC East. They've allowed the most points in the league—330—are without a true head coach and have been threathened by their fans with picket lines around Shea Stadium for inept performances.

The Steelers are 17-point favorites, but to hear the rival coaches talk you'd think they were getting ready for a life and death struggle.

"You can't take the Jets too lightly," said Steeler Coach Chuck Noll. "They have good personnel and they're due for a good game. Actually, I think their personnel is better now than when they beat us in the Super Bowl."

The "us" Noll referred to was Baltimore, where he was an assistant coach when the Jets pulled off their Super Bowl III upset. Noll still doesn't quite accept that loss.

"There are a lot of factors working in their favor," he added. "We're coming off a Monday night game, a very emotional game, and it's just past the Thanksgiving holiday. We had a similar situation last season around this time and we were upset by Houston."

Ken Shipp, the Jets' interim coach after the firing of Charley Winner two weeks ago, feels it's wrong to count his team out against Pittsburgh.

"I saw Pittsburgh Monday night and they looked pretty damn good—in every department," said Shipp, the club's offensive coordinator before being asked to replace Winner.

"But I believe that on any given day one team can beat another and that's the approach we're taking. Someday the ball is going to take the right bounces for us for a change and we're gonna kick somebody's butt. I don't care if they are the world champions—we're going in with the feeling we can win.

"You may think I'm crazy but I think we're gonna give them a helluva game. When I was in New Orleans, we beat Dallas with 15 rookies playing for us and they won the Super Bowl that year. If I didn't feel I could do it, I'd get out of coaching. I've never gone into a game I didn't think we could win."

The Jets' offen sive line has been having problems protecting quarterback Joe Namath this season and will get its stiffest test against the Steeler front four, probably the best in the NFL. Joe Greene, Pittsburgh's star defensive tackle, is questionable with a pinched nerve in his shoulder but Steve Furness has been outstanding all season as a reserve.

"We won't hurt Namath," said defensive tackle Ernie Holmes. "I'll set him gently down on the ground and tell him, "stay there.'"

The Steelers have allowed the fewest points in the league and, offensively, they've been just as awesome. Franco Harris, the No. 2 rusher in the NFL behind Buffalo's O.J. Simpson, is steaming toward a third 1,000-yard season and quarterback Terry Bradshaw is playing the best ball of his career.

Lynn Swann is developing into one of the premier receivers in the NFL and Pittsburgh will be working today against a decimated secondary. Injuries have forced the Jets to sign three new defensive backs in the last two weeks and coaches are hoping four of them stay healthy enough to walk out against the Steelers.

The lone bright spot in the offense has been fullback John Riggins, who bulled his way for 92 yards against St. Louis last week and has 647 yards overall this year.

Clancy Set to Perform

KINGSTON

Clancy, Kingston's own performing dog, will entertain children, parents and guests at the annual Christmas party given by the Children's Rehabilitation Center on Tuesday, Dec. 9, at the First Baptist Church on Albany Avenue.

Clancy, now 9½ years old, was obtained from the SPCA by Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Dittus of Kingston. Mrs. Dittus, with no idea of making him into a "show dog," began training Clancy for the fun of it and before long he began entertaining her Brownie Girl Scout Troop.

Clancy turned "pro" in March, 1972, when he performed at three children's parties in one day. Since then he has performed at numerous school assemblies, nursing homes, organizational meetings, and for Boy Scout and Girl Scout groups. During the past summer he became a member of the Van Amburgh Circus, performing at various county fairs in the Hudson Valley.

A ham at heart, Clancy, part beagle and part mystery, seems to enjoy himself as much as his delighted audiences.

Mrs. Walter Perret is chairman of the Christmas Party committee, assisted by the Junior League of Kingston.

Clancy the Cutup

Clancy, Kingston's own performing dog, rehearses one of his many tricks for Sean Van Leuven as his trainer, Mrs. Kenneth Dittus, calls the signals. Clancy has performed at many Boy Scout, Girl Scout, organizational and school assembly functions in the area and will appear Dec. 9 at the annual Christmas party given by the Children's Rehabilitation Center. PSC Adopts Deposit Rules

ALBANY

The Public Service Commission has adopted new statewide rules, effective Dec. 15, that define and limit the conditions under which electric, gas and telephone utilities may reqiure their residential customers to post security deposits.

The new rules also require a utility to refund a deposit plus interest or to apply it to the current and next succeeding bills.

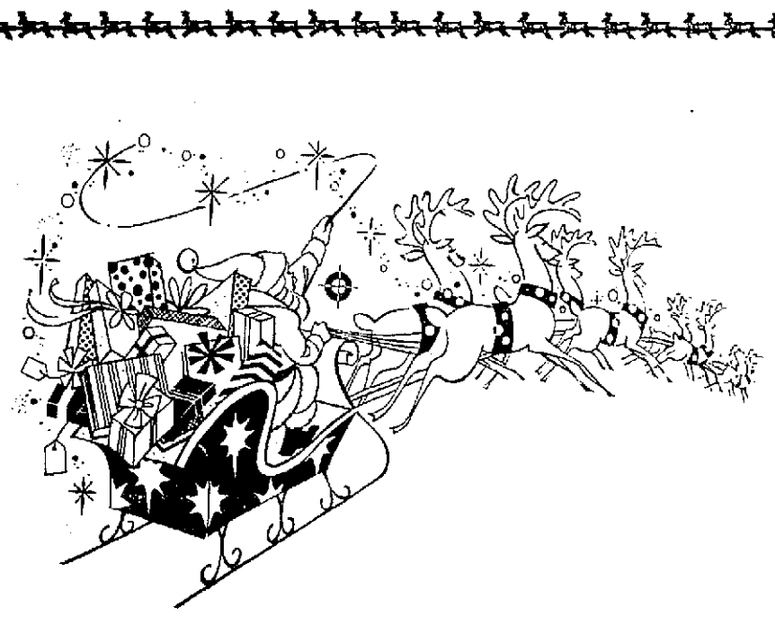

Evaluation of a customer's credit worthiness is left to the utility, depending on standard criteria.

Shortly after ordering New York Telephone Company in 1974 to establish new credit measurement procedures, the PSC began its own investigation, culminating in the new rules.

There was some disagreement among the state's utilities on facets of the question. On a proposal by the PSC that utilities use a six-question format to determine credit, already in force for New York Telephone, representatives of Central Hudson Gas and Electric Corporation state that they would eliminate deposits for all new residential customers rather than adopt the six-question procedure.

As with New York Telephone, three "positive" answers would establish the cusomer as credit-worthy with no requirement to post a deposit.

The rules did not specify the amount of deposit that could be claimed by utilities. The PSC said it denied various requests to hold public hearings on the matter because of the "time limits imposed by the law and the substantial information submitted in the form of comments."

Ky on U.S.-Viet: Pressure, No Tie

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Nguyen Cao Ky, South Vietnam's former Vice President, says America should exert world pressure to prevent persecution of the Vietnamese people by Saigon's Communist rulers but should not recognize the new regime.

Ky said resumption of diplomatic relations between the United States and Saigon would not "solve" the sufferings that his countrymen have been going through since the Communist takeover seven months ago on April 30.

"The world pressure is necessary to prevent the Communists from killing our people little by little, especially those who opposed them for many years," he said.

"In my personal opinion, the U.S. government should not establish diplomatic relations with the Communists. It would not solve anything. But, of course, we cannot force the American government to do this or that."

In hopes of averting reprisals against Vietnamese who either worked for or supported the American-backed regime of President Nguyen van Thieu, he said the United States should mount an international campaign to muster world opinion against possible atrocities.

Ky denied a report that he had advocated the return of American troops in South Vietnam to rally former South Vietnamese soldiers who were opposed to the Communists and who have been launching armed resistance against Saigon, mostly in the rice-rich Mekong Delta.

"This was something unimaginable and unrealizable. I never asked for such a thing," he said at his house in the Washington suburb of Fairfax.

Ky said a new American involvement in Asia is out of the question as far as he can see.

His house is sparsely furnished. The living room was bare of furniture and in the dining room there were no decorations around the table and six chairs.

For the interview, Ky wore a turtleneck sweater and gray trousers — a sharp contrast to the black flight suit with violet silk scarf and pistol slung on his hip which was his standard attire in South Vietnam. An American acted as an agent for the re-introductions and answered the telephone when it interrupted the interview.

Aside from lecturing at colleges, Ky makes use of his old acquaintanceship with American businessmen and bankers as contacts for his Vietnamese friends and refugees. Many of the contacts are for Vietnamese he has not met before but for whom he feels a responsibility as a former political leader.

His wife, Mai, a beautiful former Air Vietnam stewardess, busied herself in the kitchen during the interview and served green tea in Japanese glassware to her husband, an Air Marshal in the old South Vietnamese air force who was involved in a coup which led to him becoming premier in 1965 and vice president to Thieu in 1967. He was dropped from the ticket by Thieu for the 1971 elections.

Ky displayed none of his well-known outspokeness which once led him to remark that Adolf Hitler was one of his heroes.

Since coming to the United States six months ago as one of the 100,000 Vietnamese refugees, he has been giving lectures on college campuses at up to $2,500 a time to try to pay the rent and support his family of a wife and five children. He said that some of the money he earns from lectures goes to the National Center for Vietnamese Resettlement, a non-profit organization based in Washington.

Ky said that reunification of the two Vietnams, recently proclaimed by the Saigon and Hanoi leaders, was designed to show the world a semblance of unity.

"In fact, the country has been unified under Hanoi for a long time," he said. "It was Hanoi which conquered the South, not the Viet Cong. China would not like that because it means a pro-Soviet Union country is at the border. So she will try to influence Saigon to resist it.

"But I don't think Saigon has the strength [illegible]."

Satcom: New ERA Of Link

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — RCA Corporation, which has been the long distance telephone carrier for Alaska since 1973, goes nationwide next month when it launches its own communications satellite.

The satellite, RCA Satcom, weighing 2,000 pounds and capable of handling as many 24,000 one-way voice circuits or 24 simultaneous television circuits, will be launched into orbit from Cape Canaveral, Fla., Dec. 11 aboard a modified Thor-Delta rocket.

When it settles into a stationary orbit 22,500 miles above the equator directly south of Los Angeles, Satcom will be able to relay communications through an elliptical beam from any point in the United States to any other, including Hawaii and Alaska.

"It will be just as easy to transmit messages from Los Angeles to New York as it is from San Francisco to Los Angeles," according to Philip Schneider, Satcom System's executive vice president.

Since December, 1973, RCA Global Communications and RCA Alaska Communications have been leasing limited channels from Western Union's Westar and Canada's Telesat for its Alaska communication system. Ground stations at Anchorage, Juneau, Nome, Bethel, Prudhoe Bay and Valdez pick up the signals from the satellite and feed them into local telephone company circuits.

Other ground stations are already in operation at Valley Forge, Pa., and Point Reyes, Calif., and new stations are planned at Los Angeles, Chicago, Houston, Washington, D.C., Seattle and in Hawaii.

"With Satcom, we are at the beginning of a new era of communications capability in the United States," Schneider said.

For instance, he said Satcom will allow instant communications between oil drilling platforms or ships far at sea and their home office or allow scientists and researchers to establish two-way communications with remotely located data banks for study and permit low cost transmission of data between bank branches and the home office.

"Through satellites, drilling ships hundreds of miles offshore can stay in constant communications with shore-based headquarters," Schneider said. Even when these ships move from site to site, the link remains unbroken.

Ice dealers across the expert advice will not be saved by congestion, on a circuit interference from weather or waiting for the establishment of a circuit.

Ky on U.S.-Viet: Pressure, No Tie

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Nguyen Cao Ky, South Vietnam's former Vice President, says America should exert world pcessure to prevent persecution of the Vietnamese people by Saigon's Communist rulers but should not recognize the new regime.

Ky said resumption of diplomatic relations between the United States and Saigon would not "solve" ths sufferings that his countrymen have been going through since the Communist takeover seven months ago on April 30.

"The world pressure is necessary to prevent the Communists from killing our people little by little, especially those who opposed them for many years," he said.

"In my personal opinion, the U.S. government should not establish diplomatic relations with the Communists. It would not solve anything. But, of course, we cannot force the American government to do this or that."

In hopes of averting reprisals against Vietnamese who either worked for or supported the American-backed regime of President Nguyen van Thieu, he said the United States should mount an international campaign to muster world opinion against possible atrocities.

Ky denied a report that he had advocated the return of American troops in South Vietnam to rally former South Vietnamese soldiers who were opposed to the Communists and who have been launching armed resistance against Saigon, mostly in the rice-rich Mekong Delta.

"This was something unimaginable and unrealizable. I never asked for such a thing," he said at his house in the Washington suburb of Fairfax.

Ky said a new American involvement in Asia is out of the question as far as he can see.

His house is sparsely furnished. The living room was bare of furniture and in the dining room there were no decorations around the table and six chairs.

For the interview, Ky wore a turtleneck sweater and gray trousers — a sharp contrast to the black flight suit with violet silk scarf and pistol slung on his hip which was his standard attire in South Vietnam. An American acted as an agent for the re-introductions and answered the telephone when it interrupted the interview.

Aside from lecturing at colleges, Ky makes use of his old acquaintanceship with American businessmen and bankers as contacts for his Vietnamese friends and refugees. Many of the contacts are for Vietnamese he has not met before but for whom he feels a responsibility as a former political leader.

His wife, Mai, a beautiful former Air Vietnam stewardess, busied herself in the kitchen during the interview and served green tea in Japanese glassware to her husband, an Air Marshal in the old South Vietnamese air force who was involved in a coup which led to him becoming premier in 1965 and vice president to Thieu in 1967. He was dropped from the ticket by Thieu for the 1971 elections.

Ky displayed none of his well-known outspokeness which once led him to remark that Adolf Hitler was one of his heroes.

Since coming to the United States six months ago as one of the 100,000 Vietnamese refugees, he has been giving lectures on college campuses at up to $2,500 a time to try to pay the rent and support his family of a wife and five children. He said that some of the money he earns from lectures goes to the National Center for Vietnamese Resettlement, a non-profit organization based in Washington.

Ky said that reunification of the two Vietnams, recently proclaimed by the Saigon and Hanoi leaders, was designed to show the world a semblance of unity.

"In fact, the country has been unified under Hanoi for a long time," he said. "It was Hanoi which conquered the South, not the Viet Cong. China would not like that because it means a pro-Soviet Union country is at the border. So she will try to influence Saigon to resist it.

"But I don't think Saigon has the strength to do it."

Satcom: New ERA Of Link

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — RCA Corporation, which has been the long distance telephone carrier for Alaska since 1973, goes nationwide next month when it launches its own communications satellite.

The satellite, RCA Satcom, weighing 2,000 pounds and capable of handling as many 24,000 one-way voice circuits or 24 simultaneous television circuits, will be launched into orbit from Cape Canaveral, Fla., Dec. 11 aboard a modified Thor-Delta rocket.

When it settles into a stationary orbit 22,500 miles above the equator directly south of Los Angeles, Satcom will be able to relay communications through an eliptical beam from any point in the United States to any other, including Hawaii and Alaska.

"It will be just as easy to transmit messages from Los Angeles to New York as it is from San Francisco to Los Angeles," according to Philip Schneider, Satcom System's executive vice president.

Since December, 1973, RCA Global Communications and RCA Alaska Communications have been leasing limited channels from Western Union's Westar and Canada's Telesat for its Alaska communication system. Ground stations at Anchorage, Juneau, Nome, Bethel, Prudhoe Bay and Valdez pick up the signals from the satellite and feed them into local telephone company circuits.

Other ground stations are already in operation at Valley Forge, Pa., and Point Reyes, Calif., and new stations are planned at Los Angeles, Chicago, Houston Washington, D.C., Seattle and in Hawaii.

"With Satcom, we are at the beginning of a new era of communicatimns capability in the United States," Schneider said.

For instance, he said, Satcom will allow instant communications between oil drilling platforms or ships far at sea and their home office, allow schools and universities to establish two-way communications with a centrally located data bank, or library, and permit low-cost transmission of data between bank branches and the home office.

"Through satellites, drilling ships hundreds of miles offshore can stay in constant communications with shore-based headquarters," Schneider said. "Even when these ships move from site to site, the link remains unbroken.

"The driller's access to expert advice will not be delayed by congestion on a circuit, interference from weather or waiting for the establishment of a circuit.

Record Cancer $, Toll Also Up

NEW YORK (UPI) — The American Cancer Society reported Saturday it raised a record $107 million last year to fight cancer—but the toll from the dread disease continues to rise.

Donations were up some $10 million over the previous year.

The society's '76 edition of Cancer Facts and Figures estimated an annual one per cent rise in cancer deaths. But a recent report from the National Center for Health Statistics shows a 5.2 per cent increase in cancer deaths during the first seven months of this year.

Among statitisticians at the National Center and the Society there is concern and puzzlement over the apparent big upswing in cancer deaths.

There is some corroboration of the trend, however, from the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company which reports a six per cent jump in cancer deaths among policy holders the first half of this year—compared with the same period in 1974.

"Facts and Figures" was prepared before the latest report on cancer death trends from the National Center. A Cancer Society spokesman said statisticians are baffled and will try to probe the meaning of the apparent increase — "if it is valid" — in the weeks ahead.

The Cancer Society's report said one million Americans will be under care for cancer in 1976 and some 370,000 will die of cancer.

The Society's statisticians say cancer deaths would be leveling off, or even going down if there was no lung cancer.

Lung cancer will take more than 200,000 men's lives in 1976 — a new record for one year. The toll among women is going up, too. It jumped 173 per cent in 20 years.

But there is good news, too, in the report:

•One in three cancer patients is being saved these days, thanks to early detection and improvement in treatment. In the 1950's, the figure was one in four. The Society said this represents the saving of 56,000 additional lives each year.

•There is a 71 per cent chance of survival when bladder cancer is detected and treated early.

•There is an 82 per cent chance of survival when uterine cancer is detected in a localized stage.

Big Apple Sanit ...A Pickup

NEW YORK (UPI) — An independent survey released Saturday shows uncollected trash and litter on city streets for the past two months declined, indicating the Sanitation Department has temporarily recovered from layoffs and budget cutbacks last summer.

In August, 66.2 per cent of the streets and sidewalks were rated acceptable to clean and 10.9 per cent were rated dirty by Project Scoreboard, an organization funded by the Sanitation Department and the Fund for the City of New York.

In September, the organization said, cleanliness increased by nearly 9 per cent to 75 per cent. In October, the rating increased again to 79.1 per cent.

"This October's ratings are almost the same as the cleanliness level recorded last October, indicating that the city has ... recovered from the impact of this summer's cuts in service," the survey said.

"It is important that the recent progress toward improving the appearance of the city be sustained in the months ahead," Mayor Beame said, commenting on the survey. "A clean city can only be achieved through the joint efforts of the Department of Sanitation and the public," the mayor said.

Scoreboard rates streets clean or dirty by the amount of loose litter on streets and sidewalks. Garbage in proper containers is not counted.

The survey did not say what accounted for the higher rating in the past two months. The organization did, however, say that work by sanitation men was only one factor.

Timor Declared Part of Indonesia

JAKARTA, Indonesia (UPI) — Four political factions in war-torn Timor Saturday jointly proclaimed the tiny Portuguese colony part of Indonesia, according to the Indonesian Foreign Ministry.

The Foreign Ministry said the four groups issued a proclamation condemning the unilateral declaration of independence Friday by the left-wing Revolutionary Front for an Independent East Timor.

The proclamation, released to the press by the Foreign Ministry, said four centuries of "colonial subjugation" by Portugal had disrupted Timor's "strong ties" with the people of Indonesia.

"For the sake of the safety and well-being of our people, we declare our Portuguese territory part of the territory of Indonesia," the declaration said.

The statement said the declaration of independence by the left-wing group had freed the four factions of a promise to seek a negotiated settlement of the three-month-old civil war.

"We now consider there to be no legal government exercising its authority over Portuguese Timor," the document said.

The left-wing group has had the upper hand in the current fighting, but recent reports said troops supporting the four proIndonesian factions have been regaining lost territory.

The Indonesian government had no comment on the latest proclamation, but warned it would regard any foreign recognition of the left-wing state as endangering the stability of Indonesia.

"The Indonesian government is firm in its opinion that the future of Portuguese Timor must be determined by the entire population of Portuguese Timor," the Indonesian information minister said in a statement Saturday.

"Indonesia cannot tolerate a situation in Portuguese Timor which can endanger the stability of the region."

Timor, about the size of Connecticut, lies in the Indonesian archipelago east of Darwin, Australia. The western half of the island is part of Indonesian territory.

The Foreign Ministry said the proclamation to merge the colony's 600,000 residents with Indonesia was signed by leaders of the Democratic Union of Timor, the Apodeti party, the Trabalhista party and the Kota party.

Video or Daddy? Poor Pop Finishes 2nd

FARMVILLE, Va. (UPI) — Some Virginia youngsters prefer the company of a television set to their fathers.

Dr. Jung Bay Ra, a Longwood College professor, posed the question, "Which do you like better, TV or Daddy?" to a group of children aged four to six in the Farmville area.

Forty-four per cent favored television.

"TV is a formidable rival to a father in earning his child's affection," Dr. Ra said. "A child's assessment of the value of TV is a strong as his assessment of the value of his father."

The study, conducted over a two-year period, found that children with working mothers were somewhat more prone to "like Mommy better than TV" than those whose mothers did not work.

CAN $1750 CHANGE YOUR LIFE?

That's all it took to change the lives of Domesticare franchise owners all across the country. A cash investment of $1750 and a healthy measure of ambition.
They came to Domesticare with no experience at all in most cases. And they came away with a share of the billion dollar home-service market. Making more money than ever did before.
The daily support of Domesticare's comprehensive back-up system is what they all have in common. As a wholly owned subsidiary of the Drackett Division of Bristol-Myers, Domesticare provides:

1. The most comprehensive training and field assistance program in the service industry.
2. Specialized equipment, specially formulated supplies, analysis kits, uniforms, stationery and business forms.
3. A centralized billing and collecting system, a field tested advertising program, working capital, seminars and workshops.
4. Plus cash for your billings — every week — even before your customers pay their bills.

If you're looking for a new, more profitable direction in life, you owe it to yourself to look in our direction. Call or send for our straight-talking booklet and compare the Domesticare opportunity with any other business opportunity to you. Find out why we're willing to back your $1750 cash investment with financing of more than twice that amount.

CAN $1750 CHANGE YOUR LIFE?

That's all it took to change the lives of Domesticare franchise owners all across the country. A cash investment of $1750 and a healthy measure of ambition.
They came to Domesticare with no experience at all in most cases. And they came away with a share of the billion dollar home-service market. Making more money than ever did before.
The daily support of Domesticare's comprehensive back-up system is what they all have in common. As a wholly owned subsidiary of the Drackett Division of Bristol-Myers, Domesticare provides:

1. The most comprehensive training and field assistance program in the service industry.
2. Specialized equipment, specially formulated supplies, analysis kits, uniforms, stationery and business forms.
3. A centralized billing and collecting system, a field tested advertising program, working capital, seminars and workshops.
4. Plus cash for your billings — every week — even before your customers pay their bills.

If you're looking for a new, more profitable direction in life, you owe it to yourself to look in our direction. Call or send for our straight-talking booklet and compare the Domesticare opportunity with any other business opportunity to you. Find out why we're willing to back your $1750 cash investment with financing of more than twice that amount.

Hinchey Sees Help for Area Seniors

KINGSTON

"They have worked for years to pay off their homes and now with the economy the way it is and the fact that their retirement plans just can't keep up with the cost of living, they are on the verge of losing their homes to the taxman."

That was the grim prospect painted by Ulster County's Democratic Assemblyman Maurice Hinchey last week for many of his senior citizen constituents.

But Hinchey sees some help in sight and, to further encourage that help, he is urging everyone to attend a public hearing on senior citizen property tax exemptions, set for Dec. 5 here in Kingston.

The 101st District's assemblyman explained that public hearings are being held this year to gather more information to produce a bill similar to one to give seniors some property tax relief that died in the State Senate last year. The 1974 bill, which passed the assembly but failed to carry in the senate, had been introduced by Assemblyman Ronald Stott. Had it passed, seniors earning under $2,000 yearly would now by entitled to a 100 per cent property tax exemption, and those earning $5,000 a year would be allowed as much as a 50 per cent exemption.

Said Hinchey, in urging a large turnout at next week's public hearing, "Considering the fact that the senate failed to act on the bill during the last session, we will need a show of really broad support by seniors at these public hearings (there will be others around the state in addition to the one slated for the Kingston area) to get it through this year."

Seniors who would like to be heard on the subject should be at the County Office Building, 244 Fair Street, on Friday, Dec. 5 at 10 a a

Hinchey said that in addition to other information being sought through the hearing, the session will address itself to several specific questions.

Through conversations with senior citizens, legislators have found serious concern being expressed on these topics, and seniors planning to attend the hearing will be given an opportunity to field answers. Among the direct questions to be considered:

Should the surviving spouse of a senior who had a real property tax exemption on the family home be allowed to continue the exemption after the eligible person's death, even though he or she is not yet 65?

Should Social Security "cost-of-living" increases be excluded when computing a senior's income in determining real property tax exemption status?

Should state law provide that once a senior has established eligibility for a real property tax exemption in one assessment district, a move may be made to any other state district while allowing him retention of his exemption status in the new area in which he now lives?

Should the current real property tax exemption which municipalities may grant to seniors be extended?

If a person becomes 65 after the taxable status date, but before his tax bill is mailed out to him, and meets all other requirements for the exemption, should he be eligible for the exemption?

If a person eligible for a property tax exemption fails to file his exemption application by the taxable status date, and can show good reason for the delay, should the locality offer some form of relief?

Hinchey is aware he says, that many of Ulster County's 24,000 senior citizens are concerned with these problems and others—and he is confident many will want to speak out at the Dec 5 hearing.

Onteora Board Members Asked to Keep 'Mum'

BOICEVILLE

Afaid of prejudicing their "case" against suspended Superintendent of Schools Dr. Frank Marlow, board of education members have been instructed to "keep their mouths shut."

According to a statement read this past week by John Mower, board vice president, "There have been certain inaccurate and incorrect statements made recently in the press regarding actions of this board. Also, some people have asked individual board members why they are not providing more information regarding the case of the suspended superintendent, Dr. Frank M. Marlow."

"I should like to inform you," he continued, "that Dr. Marlow's Attorney Mr. Joseph D. Hill has advised this board in a letter to its president that any informal presentation, review, or discussion of charges at public meetings are in his judgment highly prejudicial and deprive Dr. Marlow of his constitutional rights of a fair hearing."

Mower concluded, "Mr. Hill requested that we refrain from making public statements. We agree with Dr. Marlow's attorney and since we do respect his constitutional rights we will not make statements regarding the situation until the hearings. We hope that citizens of the school district will remain patient until a hearing date is arranged when all the facts can be presented."

Dr. John Keough has been appointed acting superintendent, replacing high school principal Carl Brown after 30 days in that capacity.

The Rev. Wm. Coffin Will Be Bard Speaker

The Rev. William Sloane Coffin Jr., Yale University chaplain since 1958, will speak at Bard College Monday on "One World Indivisible."

The 8 p.m lecture at Bard Hall features one of the early civil rights and peace movement leaders of the 1960s. Coffin first peceived national attention as one of the seven "freedom riders" arrested and convicted in Montgomery, Ala in May, 1961 The Supreme Court later reversed that conviction

Among the first to accept the draft cards of men protesting United States military involvement in Southeast Asia, Coffin and Dr Benjamin Spock were arrested and convicted in 1968 for aiding and abetting draft resisters Those charges wee later dropped

In September, 1972 Coffin was one member of the Committee of Liaison who went to Hanoi to accompany three released prisoners of war returning to the United States He now leads the Yale Hunger Action Project, a group addressing itself tothe world food crisis.

Chapel Work

In 1830, the Bishop John J. Dubois of the New York Diocese looked wistfully toward the Hudson. The Cleremont Steamship and the completion of the Erie Canal had increased the traffic on the mighty river. He sought a means of expanding the New York Diocese and found it in the Reverend Philip J. O'Reilly. Rev. O'Reilly of the Dominican Order was born in Ireland and educated in Bologna, and must have been of an energetic and adventurous nature, for Bishop Dubois commissioned him to go north "as far as his zeal would urge him" founding parishes along the river.

Rev. O'Reilly found Gouverneur Kemble, an Episcopalian, who donated part of the Philipse estate in Cold Spring. He was a descendent of Mary Philipse, a Colonial beauty who, rumor has it, had been courted by George Washington.

Kemble's position of Supervisor of the adjoining West Point Foundry may have influenced his decision to donate the land. At the foundry, Irish Catholic workers forged the Parrott cannon and locaomotives for our earliest railroads.

The little red brick "Chapel of Our Lady" was dedicated on September 21, 1834 by Bishop DuBois. The West Point Military played, and Rev. O'Reilly beamed. The New York Mirror carried an account of the festivities on November 8, 1834: "It was a scene we shall not soon and wish never to forget, for it was full of lofty inspiration, accompanied by association of religion, of charity, and of philanthropy," wrote George Pope Morris.

Just a short walk from the chapel, a dock, approximatley thirty by twenty feet, provided mooring for boats.

The chapel served for almost a century. In the intervening years, it had gained a three story trancept, a lengthening of the nave, and two steeples. In 1931, it all but burned to the ground, leaving only the gaunt portico with its doric columns and the original 30' x 40' chapel still standing.

The Reverend John A. Grace became Administrator of the Parish of Our Lady of Loretto in 1966 and was enchanted with the little chapel. He interested an assortment in working to restore it to serve as a place of worship for all faiths. Helen Hayes became their chairman.

DOUBLE MARK-DOWN ON LETTUCE AT PALTZ CAMPUS CO-OP

Food Co-ops Are Price Fighters

Hemmed in by inflation, recession, the energy crunch and rising unemployment, Ulster County residents—along with other Americans— might logically be retrenching—or even digging trenches.

In point of fact, retrenching they are . . . and, if not literally taking shovel in hand, they are symbolically "digging in." The economic malaise has generated a mass move to shop much more carefully for food. And, as the Doom Boom deepends, the money crunch is bringing new converts through the doors of food co-ops in a happy-woe-lucky move to keep the wolf away from the door.

"Work here and reap the benefits of your labor in cheaper priced, higher quality foods," reads a sign on the 13 North Front Street door of the New Paltz Food Cooperative. It is an offer more than 1,000 members have not refused.

"We're growing every day," says David Birdflower of the in-town co-op (there's a legally separate group with a separate bank account on the local college campus), "and a lot more people who are not members shop here at slight markups."

Hundreds upon hundreds have joined the Paltz co-op since it was started in a private apartment less than four years ago by 20 people who had paid a membership fee of $5 for a minimum order to be divided up among them. Today, success has not spoiled either the fruits of the field offered, or the fruits of the labors required. A lifetime membership still costs $5 and only two hours a month work. Droves of non-working members also shop there at a 10 percent markup, and so do non-members who have not paid the membership fee, but still enjoy substantial savings even at a 20 percent markup.

But it is the full-fledged members who suffer far less from inflation blues; derive major benefits from the worksharing system. So efficient has the thriving Paltz co-op become that a minimum of effort now yields maximum results. Buyingfood in bulk for cheaper prices from as many places as possible—and always looking for new distributors in order to improve on prices— has become routine. Some products come all the way from Binghamton; others are ordered through catalogues. All food is delivered to the co-op store, where working members pre-package everything possible.

Even the work is apparently fun. When a large order was received recently, members turned out to enthusiastically wrap up the packaging chores in two days flat. Such fevered willingness cannot be attributed entirely to collegiate ranks, since only half of the membership comes from campus environs. The remainder includes townspeople in their '20s and '30s, families, and an ever-growing number of senior citizens, including an active 74-year-old.

Working members are able to trim their food budgets to sensible levels; pay 30 or 40 percent less than supermarket shoppers on everything except vegetables, where a 10 per cent saving is more typical. On health foods, increasing in popularity today, they sometimes save as much as half. And while most co-ops must cope with the responsibilities of collecting order forms, picking up and distributing food, and the often lame excuses of volunteers, the New Paltz group is saved much of that drudgery.

When the local Chamber of Commerce complained in competitive chagrin that the co-op, as originally conceived, capitalistic measures were taken to combat capitalistic philosophy. Today, the organization is a legally split entity. One unit still functions on campus; the other raised money for a move to town by selling $10, non-interest, good will donation bonds. And the enforced move to North Front Street has resulted in a more sophisticated operation than that employed by all-volunteer co-ops elsewhere.

DOUBLE MARK-DOWN ON LETTUCE AT PALTZ CAMPUS CO-OP

Food Co-ops Are Price Fighters

Hemmed in by inflation, recession, the energy crunch and rising unemployment, Ulster County residents—along with other Americans— might logically be retrenching—or even digging trenches.

In point of fact, retrenching they are . . . and, if not literally taking shovel in hand, they are symbolically "digging in." The economic malaise has generated a mass move to shop much more carefully for food. And, as the Doom Boom deepends, the money crunch is bringing new converts through the doors of food co-ops in a happy-woe-lucky move to keep the wolf away from the door.

"Work here and reap the benefits of your labor in cheaper priced, higher quality foods," reads a sign on the 13 North Front Street door of the New Paltz Food Cooperative. It is an offer more than 1,000 members have not refused.

"We're growing every day," says David Birdflower of the in-town co-op (there's a legally separate group with a separate bank account on the local college campus), "and a lot more people who are not members shop here at slight markups."

Hundreds upon hundreds have joined the Paltz co-op since it was started in a private apartment less than four years ago by 20 people who had paid a membership fee of $5 for a minimum order to be divided up among them. Today, success has not spoiled either the fruits of the field offered, or the fruits of the labors required. A lifetime membership still costs $5 and only two hours a month work. Droves of non-working members also shop there at a 10 percent markup, and so do non-members who have not paid the membership fee, but still enjoy substantial savings even at a 20 percent markup.

But it is the full-fledged members who suffer far less from inflation blues; derive major benefits from the worksharing system. So efficient has the thriving Paltz co-op become that a minimum of effort now yields maximum results. Buyingfood in bulk for cheaper prices from as many places as possible—and always looking for new distributors in order to improve on prices— has become routine. Some products come all the way from Binghamton; others are ordered through catalogues. All food is delivered to the co-op store, where working members pre-package everything possible.

Banquet co-op in the art colony has grown far beyond its original concept. Buying at wholesale or bulk discount prices from as far north as Albany and as close to home as Kingston, members have found their bargaining power packs a wallop. They avoid the multiple pricing rife in supermarkets; save substantially on foods and staples.

Unlike its New Paltz counterpart, where an in-town store and in-school location allow members to shop almost around the clock, Beggar's Banquet must ask its members to order what they need when they need it on a monthly basis. Once orders are received and the food purchased, distribution takes place in a local church. At Beggar's Banquet, too, members pay a small lifetime membership fee; are expected to help a few hours a month with the collection and distribution of food.

But so successful has the Woodstock operation become in so short a time that the possibility of a storefront also looms in its future.

Obviously, food co-ops can help solve today's budget problems. And, say those who know in New Paltz and Woodstock, "It's easy to start one; there's nothing to

'We have to be careful we don't overspend!'

it!" The name of a cooperative, collective distributor willing to advise any group interested in how to begin and follow through is available from the New Paltz Food Cooperative.

The larger the groups the lower the prices, of course. But, as few as five or six families in one neighborhood have gotten together to buy better quality food in bulk at wholesale prices, and to save on transportation. Assuming responsibility for their own bookkeeping, Picking up, sorting, weighing, packaging and bagging, they have used the garage or basement of a member's home as rent-free distribution centers.

And, whether a co-op boasts more than 1,000 members as in New Paltz, several hundred as in Woodstock, or only a few families on the block, it is open to anyone—regardless of income. Once a member, there is no obligation to buy any specific quantities of food.

If food co-ops had their beginning in the community houses and communes of the 1960s, they are now clearly an idea whose time has come. In spite of objections lodged against them by some profit-minded Chambers of Commerce, they are no longer viewed as voluntary socialism. Indeed, says David Birdflower of the Paltz group, "The best way to start is to realize that your efforts are in harmony with the economic system in this country . . . not in conflict. It's completely right for people to start cooperatives in inflated times as a necessary measure to survive. It doesn't require capital—just people understanding and willing to do more of their own services to save paying others for doing it for them."

That idea, of course, is far from new; did not originate in the protest movements of the frenzied, frantic '60s. It was just such voluntary community effort that helped to articulate and to shape the American dream. In the communal societies that floursihed here in the 19th Century, New York's Oneida built the traps that armed the fur trade, the Harmonists of Pennsylvania and Indiana sold a railroad to Commodore Vanderbilt, and Iowa's Amana launched one of the most successful joint stock manufacturing firms in the Middle West.

And Aurora operated so simply and practically the dollar-and-cent results almost entirely eliminated bookkeeping. "Of what the people use no account is kept," said the purchasing agent of that Oregon commune of the 1800's. "If a family needs flour, it goes freely to the mill and gets what it requires. If butter, it goes to the store in the same way. Tea, coffee, and sugar are roughly allowanced to each family. If anyone needs vegetables, he can get them in the large garden."

Even a dedicated Chamber of Commerce treasurer trying to balance his books in this age of inflation, recession, energy crunch and rising unemployment, might have to admit—progress and food co-ops notwithstanding—that, in retrospect, we may even have retrogressed.

Thsoe interested in joining one of the two existing Ulster County co-ops—or in obtaining information on how to start their own in their own community—can call the New Paltz Food Cooperative at 255-8130 or Beggar's Banquet through the referral phone number at Family, 679-2485.).

Ralph Nader: The Man in the Class Action Suit

Klein/Nader Interview Part II

Is there any country you can think of where there's progress toward the kind of society you'd like to see? What about China?

China is a paradox as far as we're concerned. A lot of people say that millions of Chinese are living today only because of their system; that they have much better health care than India because of their system; that they're not starving like India or Bangladesh because of their system; that they have enormous literacy compared to Southeast Asia because of their system; that they have little corruption in the sense of material acquisition, compared to South Vietnam or the Philippines, because of their system.

On the other hand, most of us wouldn't like to live in that society because it doesn't allow for some kinds of eccentricities, or much self-defined freedom of expression, or self-defined initiative . . . But there are lessons to be learned. China probably understands bureaucracy better than any other country in the world. The Chinese believe that bureaucrats have to get out of their offices and live with the people they're supposed to serve. If someone asked me the best way to make bureaucracy more responsive in the United States, it would be to make the bureaucrats live in the areas they're dealing with: The Bureau of Mines people should spend three weeks in the coal mines so they'd feel the dampness, the darkness, the dust, the cold; the people at Health, Education and Welfare should spend time in the ghetto schools—days at a time, not just tours. Now that's a principle the Chinese have applied . . .

But you see, compared to China, we can't get anything done. China eradicates VD; we can't even stop it from increasing. Is it because we don't have the communications system, the technology, the laws? They have much more serious communication and transportation obstacles than we do—they don't have a telephone system or a television system with a unit in every house. But we don't have the coordinated determination of marshaling the massive numbers of people in a common cause.

But they're still in their first generation of leadership, and historically it's been shown that you can sustain fanaticism for maybe a generation but after that it begins to fall apart . . .

Yes. The question is: Has China developed sustaining groups to carry it out behond the first generation? I don't think they have. That's the penalty for an authoritarian system—that it doesn't develop self-thinking, self-initiative, self-governing. What's working in China's favor is that they're going to be facing adversity for a long time.

Do you think this country is corrupt in a Romanorgy sense?

Well, there are certain dimensions of it that are. For example, I think we're gluttonous in terms of our consumption and that people are killing themselves by overeating . . . or eating the wrong food urged upon them by the food industry.

What about personal morals: the breakdown of marriage and the nuclear family . . . the increasing acceptance of homosexuality. Do you think that the more affluent the society has become, the more people have been able to experiment with their personal lives?

Yes, that's probably a function of communications too. That is, the facts spread faster when seen on television or read about in the newspapers and magazines.

And what does that mean for the kind of society that you'd like to see? Do you think it's a bag thing when people can indulge themselves any way they want? Do you think there should be a strict moral code?

No, I think the two can live side by side.

Can you give me an instance where it's ever happened?

Well, there's never really been an instance of effective selfgovernment on any broad scale, over time, in the history of the world. However, if you say Scandinavia comes closer, they certainly haven't participated in puritanism in terms of their personal lives.

The basic issue is: How much time does it take to make power just? It might not take all that much time. I mean, if people develop a level of self-government, they won't have to spend all that much time asserting it. Like right now, you don't have to spend time asserting your right to free speech, because years ago the Bill of Rights was passed. There are cause celebres and things like that but it isn't a struggle every time. And once it's been established, once power has been made just, it won't have to be an all-consuming process . . . but it would require steady attention.

But if the economy were set up the way you want it to be—more "inefficient" in the traditional sense yet more aware of human values—wouldn't people have to work longer? I mean, it would take a team of four workers much longer to assemble a car than it would take an assembly line. So how could you say they'd be working less?

Well, they'd be working less because they'd be more in control of their wants. Take the petrochemical industry: There was a fellow the other day who said the petrochemical industry could never be made safe, so it should be abolished. Much of what it does is produce trivia, by and large, plastic containers and so forth. People could decide that they didn't need to get food in plastic containers every time they went to the market and so the petrochemical plant wouldn't be operating anymore.

The immediate question is: What do you do with all the people who'd be put out of work? Unless we have an answer to that, then industry will be justified simply on the grounds of employment, even though it may jeopardize the future of society, contaminate the environment or get us into wars. I think people should spend a greater portion of their time in their consumer role to raise their standard of living by a wiser use of their consumer dollar. Notice the difference in roles here: Most economic theory is focused on the producing side of the economy. There's been very little on the consumer side—even though, as Adam Smith said, the end of all production is consumption.

Basically, you have to have a very dramatic shift in the time we apply to the consumption side so we can develop the skills and knowledge that will make the production side more rational. You ask a worker how much time do you spend earning enough money to buy a new car? He'll say something like 700 hours. Then you ask: How much time do you spend learning how to buy a new car? Nothing. No time at all.

Do you mean that some people would just become professional consumers, subsidized by the government?

No, I mean people would spend more time to become astute consumers. After all, what do people go to work for? Most go to work primarily to consume. Some people would be given jobs by the government, though, to develop expertise as consumers, so they can lend that expertise to others. . . .

For example?

For example, they would walk a family through a supermarket an show them where the best buys are.

You mean, that in a used car lot there would be a salesman and your very own consumer advocate?

Sure. You'd just dial a number and call the professional consumer and say, "Look, I'm going down to buy a used car and I really don't know how—would you walk me thrugh?" Or, "I'm going to buy this house." And then along would come this professional consumer who'd say, "Hey, you don't have to have this title insurance . . . and you've got a right to choose your own lawyer, you don't have to take the six percent realty fee, you can bargain with them. . . ." And so on.

Would this service be free, government subsidized?

Sure.

Because there've been times when I would have paid for something like that.

The government encourages promotion of the sale of products all the time. Much of what the Commerce Department does—at a budget of $1.1 billion each year—is help sell corporate products here and abroad. And what about all the agricultural subsidies? What I'm saying is, if you're going to help producers, why not help the consumer too? It would cost much less.

How do you get to the point where there's a public debate on these sorts of things? What has to happen to get people to start talking about changing the basic system?

Well, the most important change is one of attitude on the part of people who are looking for leaders. . .

Maybe the most appropriate kind of leadership is the kind that gives power out . . .

That's well put. The function of genuine leadership is to prduce more leaders, to produce opportunities for local initiative, to produce information which will help people help themselves.

The most important question that can be asked about any society at any time is, now much effort do citizens spend exercising their civic responsibility. Now, in a total dictatorship the answer is usually none, because even if people wanted to, they couldn't. But in a theoretical democracy, when the answer is less than ten hours a year, on the average, then that tells us something about the way power operates in this society. There's only so much power: If it's not used by many people, it'll be used by a few people.

One group of people that's attempted to become active over the last decade is students. The conventional wisdom is that students are less active now but I've heard you disagree with that in the past. If you're right, if students are still active and concerned, why are so many people saying they aren't? Do you think there are certain interests that want to put across the image that there's no student movement?

Yes. Not the least of which are many college administrators, boards of trustees and even some faculty. They know student movements tend to be contagious. Also, if people don't see students rioting, demonstrating, sitting in, then there's no student movement. They don't see an intellectual or advocacy movement among students as worthy of being called a student movement. The struggle now, though, is clearly going to be: Who's going to govern the universities? All over the country there are boards of trustees and regents riddled with conflicts of material interest, where they have interests in the banking industry or construction and are utilizing their position to enrich their industries or ward off criticism of their industries by making sure that unruly professors or controversial research just don't go on at universities. And the students, I think, are beginning to see that they are being educated in a highly authoritarian environment, run by the corporate interests.

Do you find it ironic that the FBI, with its massive counter-intelligence programs, is one of the few other organizations to take the student movement as seriously as you over the past five years?

I think the FBI recognizes that movements to change society start with the young and they often start with the young who are privileged enough to have time to think.

Let's take a specific group of people—any group—how do you get them to take control of their lives, to become involved in their community instead of sitting home and watching TV or whatever?

You have to do three things. You have to show them what the consequences are if they don't — there is unemployment, depression, pollution, a terrible life for their children, rotten school systems, crime and so forth. Second, you've got to provide them with an opportunity to develop their strategies and technique, and that means grass roots civic groups. And thirdly, it's got to be made interesting and fun. For example, professional sports attract massive amounts of time from the American people, compared to the amount of time they spend on improving their school systems.

That's the preliminary problem. If someone were to ask me what's the biggest problem in dealing with the District of Columbia government, I'd say it's the fact that 99% of the people in the District of Columbia don't want to be bothered. They don't want to go away from their television sets when they have leisure time.

Aren't you fighting human nature, though?

Yeah, that's the true fight. Everybody is grappling with that. That's the greatest problem in history—how do you get people to become serious about deciding things for themselves, instead of letting other people decide things for them?

But I think we have a chance of getting that kind of change because because the situation in this country is getting worse. Even without a major depression now, you're seeing churnings and tumult among the people—and we haven't even been marginally deprived, in the aggregate, compared to what it could really be like.

No, I think the two can live side by side.

Can you give me an instance where it's ever happened?

Well, there's never really been an instance of effective selfgovernment on any broad scale, over time, in the history of the world. However, if you say Scandinavia comes closer, they certainly haven't participated in puritanism in terms of their personal lives.

The basic issue is: How much time does it take to make power just? It might not take all that much time. I mean, if people develop a level of self-government, they won't have to spend all that much time asserting it. Like right now, you don't have to spend time asserting your right to free speech, because years ago the Bill of Rights was passed. There are cause celebres and things like that but it isn't a struggle every time. And once it's been established, once power has been made just, it won't have to be an all-consuming process . . . but it would require steady attention.

But if the economy were set up the way you want it to be—more "inefficient" in the traditional sense yet more aware of human values—wouldn't people have to work longer? I mean, it would take a team of four workers much longer to assemble a car than it would take an assembly line. So how could you say they'd be working less?

Well, they'd be working less because they'd be more in control of their wants. Take the petrochemical industry: There was a fellow the other day who said the petrochemical industry could never be made safe, so it should be abolished. Much of what it does is produce trivia, by and large, plastic containers and so forth. People could decide that they didn't need to get food in plastic containers every time they went to the market and so the petrochemical plant wouldn't be operating anymore.

The immediate question is: What do you do with all the people who'd be put out of work? Unless we have an answer to that, then industry will be justified simply on the grounds of employment, even though it may jeopardize the future of society, contaminate the environment or get us into wars. I think people should spend a greater portion of their time in their consumer role to raise their standard of living by a wiser use of their consumer dollar. Notice the difference in roles here: Most economic theory is focused on the producing side of the economy. There's been very little on the consumer side—even though, as Adam Smith said, the end of all production is consumption.

Basically, you have to have a very dramatic shift in the time we apply to the consumption side so we can develop the skills and knowledge that will make the production side more rational. You ask a worker how much time do you spend earning enough money to buy a new car? He'll say something like 700 hours. Then you ask: How much time do you spend learning how to buy a new car? Nothing. No time at all.

Do you mean that some people would just become professional consumers, subsidized by the government?

No, I mean people would spend more time to become astute consumers. After all, what do people go to work for? Most go to work primarily to consume. Some people would be given jobs by the government, though, to develop expertise as consumers, so they can lend that expertise to others. . . .

For example?

For example, they would walk a family through a supermarket an show them where the best buys are.

You mean, that in a used car lot there would be a salesman and your very own consumer advocate?

Sure. You'd just dial a number and call the professional consumer and say, "Look, I'm going down to buy a used car and I really don't know how—would you walk me thrugh?" Or, "I'm going to buy this house." And then along would come this professional consumer who'd say, "Hey, you don't have to have this title insurance . . . and you've got a right to choose your own lawyer, you don't have to take the six percent realty fee, you can bargain with them. . . ." And so on.

Would this service be free, government subsidized?

Sure.

Because there've been times when I would have paid for something like that.

The government encourages promotion of the sale of products all the time. Much of what the Commerce Department does—at a budget of $1.1 billion each year—is help sell corporate products here and abroad. And what about all the agricultural subsidies? What I'm saying is, if you're going to help producers, why not help the consumer too? It would cost much less.

How do you get to the point where there's a public debate on these sorts of things? What has to happen to get people to start talking about changing the basic system?

Well, the most important change is one of attitude on the part of people who are looking for leaders. . . .

Maybe the most appropriate kind of leadership is the kind that gives power out . . .

That's well put. The function of genuine leadership is to prduce more leaders, to produce opportunities for local initiative, to produce information which will help people help themselves.

The most important question that can be asked about any society at any time is, now much effort do citizens spend exercising their civic responsibility. Now, in a total dictatorship the answer is usually none, because even if people wanted to, they couldn't. But in a theoretical democracy, when the answer is less than ten hours a year, on the average, then that tells us something about the way power operates in this society. There's only so much power: If it's not used by many people, it'll be used by a few people.

One group of people that's attempted to become active over the last decade is students. The conventional wisdom is that students are less active now but I've heard you disagree with that in the past. If you're right, if students are still active and concerned, why are so many people saying they aren't? Do you think there are certain interests that want to put across the image that there's no student movement?

Yes. Not the least of which are many college administrators, boards of trustees and even some faculty. They know student movements tend to be contagious. Also, if people don't see students rioting, demonstrating, sitting in, then there's no student movement. They don't see an intellectual or advocacy movement among students as worthy of being called a student movement. The struggle now, though, is clearly going to be: Who's going to govern the universities? All over the country there are boards of trustees and regents riddled with conflicts of material interest, where they have interests in the banking industry or construction and are utilizing their position to enrich their industries or ward off criticism of their industries by making sure that unruly professors or controversial research just don't go on at universities. And the students, I think, are beginning to see that they are being educated in a highly authoritarian environment, run by the corporate interests.

Do you find it ironic that the FBI, with its massive counter-intelligence programs, is one of the few other organizations to take the student movement as seriously as you over the past five years?

I think the FBI recognizes that movements to change society start with the young and they often start with the young who are privileged enough to have time to think.

Let's take a specific group of people—any group—how do you get them to take control of their lives, to become involved in their community instead of sitting home and watching TV or whatever?

You have to do three things. You have to show them what the consequences are if they don't — there is unemployment, depression, pollution, a terrible life for their children, rotten school systems, crime and so forth. Second, you've got to provide them with an opportunity to develop their strategies and technique, and that means grass roots civic groups. And thirdly, it's got to be made interesting and fun. For example, professional sports attract massive amounts of time from the American people, compared to the amount of time they spend on improving their school systems.

That's the preliminary problem. If someone were to ask me what's the biggest problem in dealing with the District of Columbia government, I'd say it's the fact that 99% of the people in the District of Columbia don't want to be bothered. They don't want to go away from their television sets when they have leisure time.

Aren't you fighting human nature, though?

Yeah, that's the true fight. Everybody is grappling with that. That's the greatest problem in history—how do you get people to become serious about deciding things for themselves, instead of letting other people decide things for them?

But I think we have a chance of getting that kind of change because because the situation in this country is getting worse. Even without a major depression now, you're seeing churnings and tumult among the people—and we haven't even been marginally deprived, in the aggregate, compared to what it could really be like.

Do you mean that there's a major depression coming?

It won't be the depression of the Thirties, but what's coming is the following: so distorted an economic system that the apparent solutions produce all the wrong effects. It's basically a kind of economic suicide, where in order to get out of stagnation and unemployment, we're producing the kinds of things that will create more problems in future years. Look at our surface transportation system: You can safely say that it's heading toward suicide; it's grinding to a halt in terms of congestion; it's polluting the air enormously; it's depleting energy and other resources; and, in return, what are we getting for it?

It also seems to be killing itself economically.

See, here's another example of the trouble we're in. Until a few years ago, an eight-million-car year was pretty good for Detroit. In the last few years up till 1974, it expanded to about 12 million and the whole infrastructure supporting the car industry supporting the car industry has expanded. Now when it goes back to an eight-million-car year, the economy is tossed into a tailspin. And so there's the choice: Should we try to salvage the auto industry or redirect the resources to other industries and service outlets? The immediate response is to salvage the industry, get it back up to 12, 14, 16 million cars a year . . . and what does that do? It exacerbates all the problems along the line, from taking too long to get to work, to suburban sprawl, to pollution, to casualties on the highways, insurance problems, anti-mass tranit consequences and so forth. So, our economy is hurtling along self-destructive paths and it tries to deceive itself into think-ing that it is bailing itself out of one economic crisis after another.

How are people reacting to that? Are they getting angry . . . or are they turning more assiduously toward their TV sets?

Well, there's an agrument that people become more conservative during times of economic crisis, that they aren't willing to experiment because they perceive their job as the most get out, they would respond in a completely different way.

But when all they're told is that the automobile industry is in difficult straits because of pollution and safety controls . . . and they're not told anything about the gross corruption and mismanagement that led the auto industry to its current situation, then it's not surprising that they won't ask: What can we do to restructure or change the auto industry?

I ask myself: Supppose we had three hours of network time every week, where would the citizens movement be? It would be 100 times more effective.

The history of things like that is you'd probably wind up getting your three hours opposite the Super Bowl.

Even so, you'd still have a relatively massive audience.

What would you do with the time? Let's take specifics: You are going to deal with two or three issues—agribusiness, the energy crisis . . . You pick the third area.

We'll say insurance.

Okay, how do you deal with those issues on a TV show? Let's start with food.

Well you start by showing a hot dog. Then you show people eating hot dogs, a hot dog stand. Then you go all the way back to the beef cattle, okay? You show the whole beef processing thing in reality — the filth, the hormones, the antibiotics they have to pump the cattle with because they're shivering. They don't move on the the range anymore; they're in these big feed lots. And you show the amount of fat that goes into a hot dog and the water and the color dyes.

Then you show how taste can easily be manipulated. You show putrid meat, then you show the next stage —after it's been colored. Then the next stage—nice pink. Then the next stage—all seasoned with chemicals. Then you move it into just a delicious hot dog with mustard.

And you show the effect o the carcinogens in the meat. You show advanced cases of cancer. Bladder cancer, for example.

You mean, you actually show them what a bladder looks like when it's . . .

Sure.

You'd show victims.

Sure. I mean, that's what carcinogenic cells look like. And then you show why this is done: It's basically done for the immediate commercial convenience of the processors. It's these things you can do with television that you can't do with the written word.

Would there be a punch line? Would you show people what they can do to change it?

The basic punch line is this. You ask: What can you do about this right now? And the answer is: nothing. At this moment in time, you don't know how to do anything about it. So then you start. You know, the first thing you've got to do is decide you want to spend some time. You can't be a great bridge player just by reading a book. You've gotta play bridge. You want to play citizen action? Fine! Here's what you can you can do: If you want to spend just five hours a month, here's what you can do. If you want to spend 30 hours a month, here's what you can do. See, very basic stuff.

Start on the local level. Did you ever go down to the supermarket and say: "We're five families and we've been patronizing you for ten years, and we spend an average of $14,000 a year, total, and we'd like to have a meeting with you some evening after your store is closed." So you sit down and have a meeting with the manager and say, "We think you should have monthly meetings with your customers so they can air their grievances and ask you questions. You're a food expert, you should know exactly what you're selling. And we'll present you with a petition with the names of 500 families who live in this area who want the meeting too." Then you start asking questions: "Why do you sell this? Why don't you sell that?" And it begins to focus some bargaining power on the part of the buyers.

Has that been done anywhere?

No. But you see how relatively easy it is. Here's another thing you could do. You have shopping centers all over the country now, some of them patronized by 15-20,000 families. Huge, okay? So suppose you organize the families so that each threw in $5 a year . . . and develop a fund of $100,000. And they set up an office in the shopping center—a grievance and complaint bureau, with an economist and a lawyer and a publicist. Any time you'd have a complaint about shoddy merchandise or price gouging or lack of courtesy, they'd be right on the premises, ready to help you.

That sounds like the professional consumer idea.

That's right. It's also part of the overall desire that more and more of society's time and energy be spent backing the consumer side of the economy, not just the producers.

It sounds like your TV show would involve a lot of "advocacy journalism" and that's pretty tough to do on TV because of the so-called fairness doctrine. do you think that broadcasters should have the same kind of First Amendment rights as newspapers— complete freedom of speech?

Yet, the First Amendment should apply to TV—and to all its consumers. That is, there should be a constitutionally recognized right of access by the people because basically the mass media are a monopoly. They're using our airwaves, and it's nonsense to say that for the few bucks a year that they pay in license fees that they can determine what goes over those airwaves. So I would apply the First Amendment in both the passive and progressive sense: Don't stifle the right to say what the person wants to say. but also don't allow the broadcasters to block access on the part of the citizens who want to have access.

In next week's installment on Nader's interview by Joe Klein, Nader gives his view of the current energy shortage, a shortage he feels isn't real.

Ballet Class Helps Patients

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (UPI) — There is a class at the University of Santa Clara in which the students have one deeply personal experience in common. All are mastectomy patients.

It is a ballet class, but for the students it is above all part of the road to recovery from one of the most traumatic operations a woman can have — removal of a breast.

"The breast looms so large in our concept of 'woman' that its removal often makes a woman feel less feminine — less of a woman," said one student.

"Since ballet has long been associated with feminine grace and beauty, performing ballet helps restore some of that 'lost' femininity."

The ballet program has won official endorsement from the American Cancer Society through the efforts of Diana Stumm, member of the ACS advisory board.

"I am particularly impressed with the Santa Clara program because it takes care of the whole person," said Miss Stumm, head physical therapist at the Palo Alto, Calif., Medical Clinic.

"These women are going through lots of anxieties, fears, apprehensions and emotional turmoils — a common reaction to amputation, which is what mastectomy is.

"A successful recovery program must take this into consideration. It must allow a woman to express herself, to feel feminine, to know the joy of freedom of movement and to believe that she looks nice.

"The ballet class does all of this. It is like having encounter therapy and physical exercise and a friendly group meeting all rolled into one."

Teacher of the once-a-week class, which is free to any woman who has had a mastectomy, is the university's ballet artist-in-residence, Diana Welch.

And although emotional rehabilitation is critical to the students, there is equal emphasis on rebuilding strength and mobility for the entire body.

"Ballet builds up the very muscles that are weakened by a mastectomy," said Miss Welch. "And the movement is slow and flowing, preventing any jerking or jarring that could damage the muscles further."

According to Miss Stumm, tissue that is pulled down across the chest over the breast during surgery is stretched tighter than previously to compensate for removed skin. The tautness restricts the shoulder's freedom of movement.

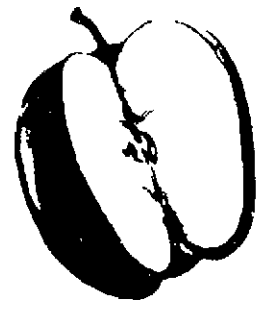

"These restrictions can be eliminated through proper exercise," said Miss Stumm.

'Marathon Man' Teams Olivier and Hoffman

Bodyguard of Lies, by Antho- ny Cave Brown. (Harper and Row, $15.95)

The public has been reading spy stories for generations without realizing that the best ones were locked away in CIA files and at the offices of British Intelligence.

The British, of course, always did the spy bit with a style and panache that their American counterparts never approached. They really did have supposedly woolly brained university dons such as Leslie Howard played in "Pimpernel Smith" who casually performed the most astonishing feats.

An endless array of stories are gathered in this fat, engrossing volume and each one seems more improbable than the next. The "Bodyguard" of the title was layer upon layer of deception to mislead the Germans as to the time and place of the Allied invasion of Europe.

Then there was the decoding machine, invented by one of those British eccentrics, which permitted the interception of coded German wireless communications, a coup that likely changed the direction of World War II.

The book adds a footnote to the well known story of the actor who impersonated Gen. Bernard Montgomery, one of the ploys designed to divert German attention to the Mediterranean as an invasion target. The actor, an enlisted man, continued to receive a general's pay after the impersonation ended.

"Bodyguard of Lies" is written in straight journalese, with no pretentions other than to entertain, which it does admirably and consistently.

Plant and Planet, by Anthony Huxley. (Viking, $14.95).

Anthony Julian Huxley knows as much about plants in all their aspects as anyone alive, and has packed an incredible amount of information into this 385-page book, originally published in Britain in 1974.

Like his famous father, Sir Julian Huxley, he wears his erudition lightly, and Plant and Planet is a highly readable work, for nature lovers, gardeners, agriculturists and ecologists alike.

At first, you feel the lack of illustrations (there are only general engravings as chapter headings), which the author justifies by pointing out that adequate illustrations would make the book prohibitive in price or too much like a textbook. And how right he proves. Huxley loves plants, and a little basic knowledge of botany and a little imagination on the part of the reader are all he needs to become riveted by the extraordinary wonders of nature.

This is a book to keep on that special shelf reserved for wellthumbed volumes which you can take down for a half hour of pleasure at any time.

Huxley provides a basic introduction into the history, structure and growth of plants, always giving examples of the basic plant and also of its multitudinous variations. He then expands into plant methods of adaptation, feeding, communication, protection, sex habits, and their value to and exploitation by man.

The five most fascinating of the 30 chapters concern the interrelation of man and plant, past, present and future. His own personal interest is in wild plants, where the future looks bleak with at least 20,000 species likely to become extinct within the next century. His picture of a science-fiction future of increased production and renewal of arid lands is a combination of optimistic possibility and of dire warning about the results of uncontrolled population growth and uncontrolled exploitation.

'Marathon Man' Teams Olivier and Hoffman

Sixty-eight-year-old Laurence Olivier, top right, adds more glitter to the diamond exchange area in New York as he gets ready for some location shooting for "Marathon Man," a new film being produced for Paramount Pictures by Robert Evans. It's Olivier's first work in the U.S. in 25 years. Movie, which also stars Dustin Hoffman, is a drama of suspense and intrigue which tells of a moral confrontation between a New York intellectual (Hoffman) and one of the world's most wanted criminals (Olivier). In this scene, below, being shot on location in New York, Olivier (L) has just slashed a man's throat and is checking the result. (UPI)

Bodyguard of Lies, by Antho- ny Cave Brown. (Harper and Row, $15.95)

The public has been reading spy stories for generations without realizing that the best ones were locked away in CIA files and at the offices of British Intelligence.

The British, of course, always did the spy bit with a style and panache that their American counterparts never approached. They really did have supposedly woolly brained university dons such as Leslie Howard played in "Pimpernel Smith" who casually performed the most astonishing feats.

An endless array of stories are gathered in this fat, engrossing volume and each one seems more improbable than the next. The "Bodyguard" of the title was layer upon layer of deception to mislead the Germans as to the time and place of the Allied invasion of Europe.

Then there was the decoding machine, invented by one of those British eccentrics, which permitted the interception of coded German wireless communications, a coup that likely changed the direction of World War II.

The book adds a footnote to the well known story of the actor who impersonated Gen. Bernard Montgomery, one of the ploys designed to divert German attention to the Mediterranean as an invasion target. The actor, an enlisted man, continued to receive a general's pay after the impersonation ended.

"Bodyguard of Lies" is written in straight journalese, with no pretentions other than to entertain, which it does admirably and consistently.

Plant and Planet, by Anthony Huxley. (Viking, $14.95).

Anthony Julian Huxley knows as much about plants in all their aspects as anyone alive, and has packed an incredible amount of information into this 385-page book, originally published in Britain in 1974.

Like his famous father, Sir Julian Huxley, he wears his erudition lightly, and Plant and Planet is a highly readable work, for nature lovers, gardeners, agriculturists and ecologists alike.

At first, you feel the lack of illustrations (there are only general engravings as chapter headings), which the author justifies by pointing out that adequate illustrations would make the book prohibitive in price or too much like a texthhbook. And how right he proves. Huxley loves plants, and a little basic knowledge of botany and a little imagination on the part of the reader are all he needs to become riveted by the extraordinary wonders of nature.

This is a book to keep on that special shelf reserved for wellthumbed volumes which you can take down for a half hou r of pleasure at any time.

Huxley provides a basic introduction into the history, structure and growth of plants, always giving examples of the basic plant and also of its multitudinous variations. He then expands into plant methods of adaptation, feeding, communication, protection, sex habits, and their value to and exploitation by man.

The five most fascinating of the 30 chapters concern the interrelation of man and plant, past, present and future. His own personal interest is in wild plants, where the future looks bleak with at least 20,000 species likely to become extinct within the next century. His picture of a science-fiction future of increased production and renewal of arid lands is a combination of optimistic possibility and of dire warning about the results of uncontrolled population growth and uncontrolled exploitation.

For the first time in 70 years, kids' art is being used on Christmas seals.

Work on the seals began two years ago when a committee decided to switch to children's art and to pick one design from each state, plus one from the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Samoa-Guam.

Art teachers throughout the country asked kids to paint pictures about what Christmas means to them. This was not a contest and the children did not even know their paintings were being considered for the seals.

The seals are issued each year by the American Lung Association. The money raised is used to fight lung diseases and air pollution.

WOOD STOVE CONTRIBUTES MIGHTILY

Viewing the current energy crossroads in this light, many people have called upon their inventiveness to provide transitional means of heating their homes. Many people simply cut back on services and do more things for themselves (that two cents a gallon at the service station). Others explore entirely new directions, such as the Ahead Corp. of West Hurley with a newly designed and constructed solar-heated home this winter.

In our richly forested region, wood is the ost readily available and cheapest combustible commodity and is zooming to newfound popularity in that stalwart cast iron creature, the wood stove, as well as making a fireplace far more than a showpiece. In fact, inventor Paul Sturges of Alligerville has engineered the old "heat exchange" principle to take full advantage of both the Franklin stove and the fireplace as space heaters.

My introduction to wood came in the form of a pile. Having moved upstate to enjoy the benefits of the great outdoors, our family bought a semi-insulated old home constructed by two artists. The paintings on the walls were great as we bedded down around the fireplace that first winter or ate huddled around a roaring wood stove. Said my father, "Wood is an ideal fuel. You get warm twice—once when you chop it and once when you burn it."

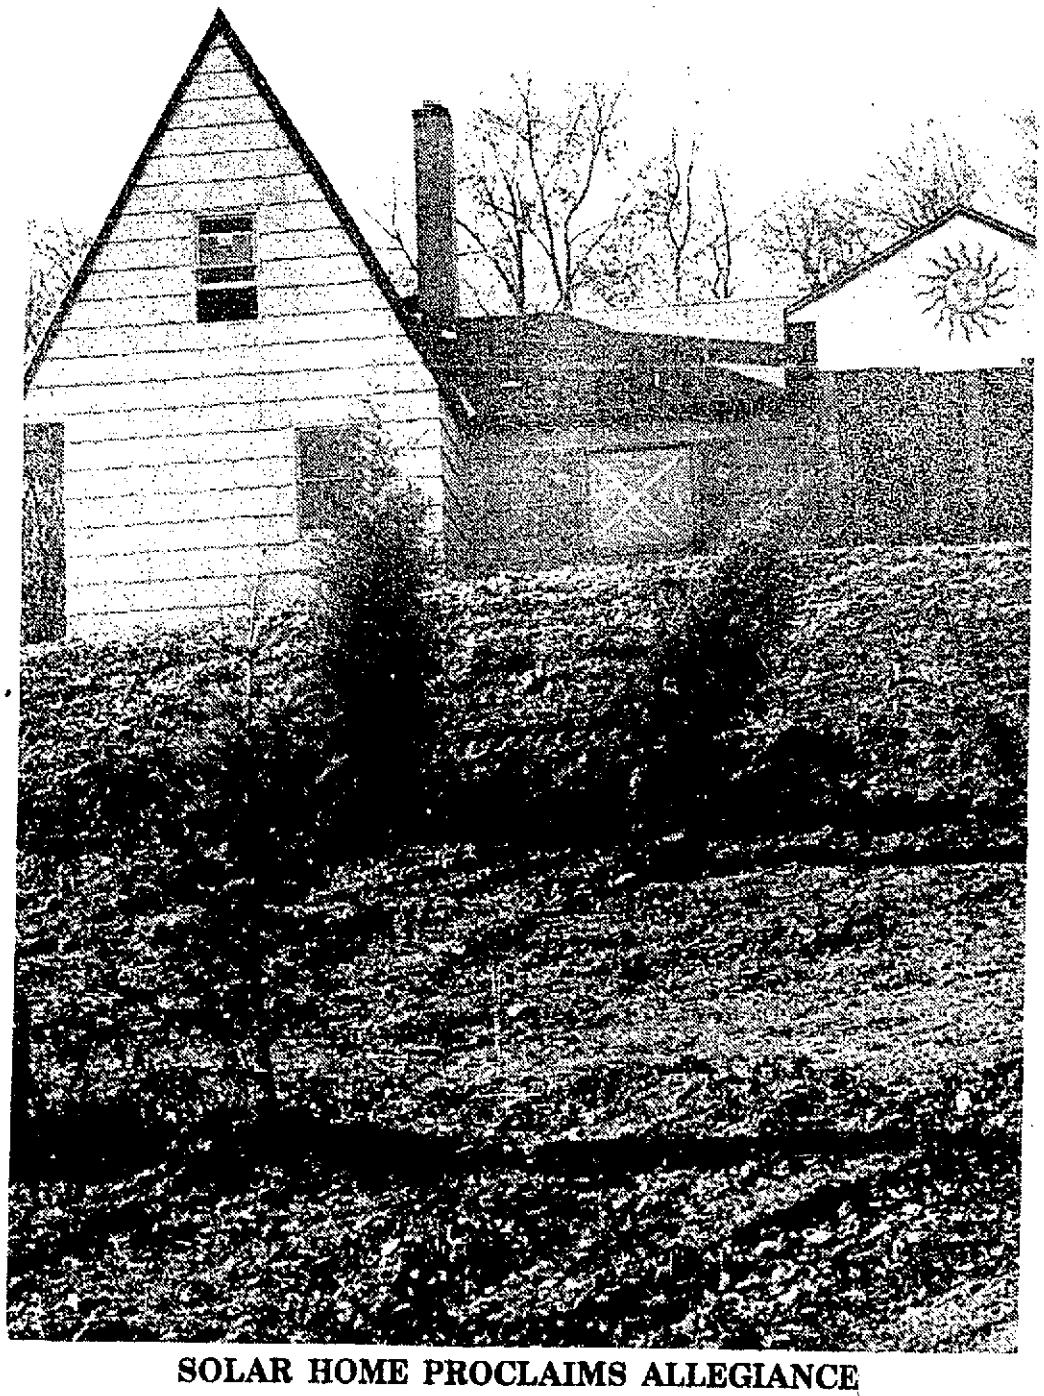

With employment scarce, wood has become a more important commercial item in the county's rural regions. At least a half dozen teenagers we know have jumped on the bandwagon, wielding their chain saws with abandon to make some cash.

And the local market for firewood is good, according to all reports. In a random phone survey of those selling firewood in the Freeman classifieds one day we found all saying there was high demand this year; half had sold firewood in past years, but the other half were new to the business and apparently doing well. One reported selling three cords the first night his ad was in the newspaper. Another declared, "Last night I took five orders for face cords."

Demand has evidently kept the price up to a stable point, averaging $25 to $30 a face cord (about half cord) and $50 a cord (128 cubic feet, or a pile 4' by 4' by 8'). Dealers reported getting wood from a variety of places: clearing new land; leftover tops from lumber yards and sawmills; those infamous piles by the roadside left behind by highway crews; and scavenging in the woods.

Paul Sturges, Stone Ridge businessmen and inventor, has sold "about 100" of his efficient heat exchanger-equipped Franklin stoves in the past two years, and he noted recently that there is "a lot of competition now in the market . . . There are wood stove companies all over the place; the market is better tha n I have ever seen."

His process of recapturing heat that ordinarily is lost up the flue through copper tubes installed there, either through natural convection or fans blowing cool air through the tubes, has been around for at least 25 years. Sturges has refined it on the Franklin stove and fireplace models to increase heating efficiency from about 15 to more than 60 per cent. In other words, you can get four times the heat from the same amount of wood.

Sturges has a vested interest in the success of his newly redesinged fireplace model that eliminates all need for electricity,including the fan. His A-frame house in Alligerville is heated in this way, and so far without lengthy cold spells it has worked very satisfactorily.

With his system's ability to retain heat, he gives this expert advice on how to maximize efficiency: burn the wood hot and fast for about two hours, and "I don't need another fire for 12 or 14 hours. When it gets colder, I'll have to burn more frequently."

The burning of wood seems to have a common history with a back to paleolithic times. During that time his view of the sun has undergone many revisions including fear, worship, and wonder. Today, with the realization that our atmosphere is constantly receiving immese quantities of the sun's energy, far more than we lose, it is tempting to speculate on more direct use of this energy than the traditional fossil fuel chain. $Robert Ramage, retired New York City advertising executive, will find out this winter whether his all new solar-heated home in Wappingers Falls lives up to his expectations. Ramage and engineer Neil Freer, president of Ahead Corp. are dedicated to finding a viable alternative to fossil fuel and nuclear energy. For this project, there are no government loans, no public agencies coordinating support and issuing favorable press releases, and no corporate funding.

Ramage is betting in the neighborhood of $50,000 that the system is good (including the cost of the house) with the hope that he will recover his investment within ten years. The heating system costs about two to three times what a conventional central heating system does.

It works basically like this: Fiberglass solar panels installed on the sloping roof catch the sun's rays; air ducts lead back to a storage tank filled with crushed stone to retain heat, up to one million BTU's for later circulation through dampers and fans to each of six rooms; each room has its own automatic thermostat. If there is not sufficient sun for a long period of time (say, more than three days in mid-winter) the a standby electric heating system can be used.

The beauty of the solar heating plan is its simplicity. There are no moving parts except small fans and a small motor to move dampers. There is no fuel required, other than that gaseous nuclear reaction 93 million miles away. It is here that the savings are anticipated.

Freer waxes enthusiastic over the system he designed himself, right down to the control panel in the garage with its flashing lights just installed in mid-November. The system has been started up, he said, and will take three or four weeks to build to "maximum capacity." Builders are still installing insulation and ramage is apparently intent on moving in shortly.

The engineer noted that there were some minor unanticipated construction problems that were ironed out. "It's the first house we've done, " he explained, and also the Hudson Valley's first solar-heated house. He was able to install only one or two panels in the roof per day at first, but them got the knack and by midway was able to complete ten per day. Roof rafters 2 by 10's, and had to be braced with 2 by 4s because some had warped a bit." A roof sealed was discarded because it couldn't withstand the heat of well over 200 degrees F. A replacement was found.

Prospects for successful solar power seem brightest in desert regions, such as the American Southwest, there the vagaries of our prevailing weather pattern did not becloud the skies. Howard K. Smith, ABC news anchorman, recently boosted the cause of entire sun cities in the desert as a feasible plan.

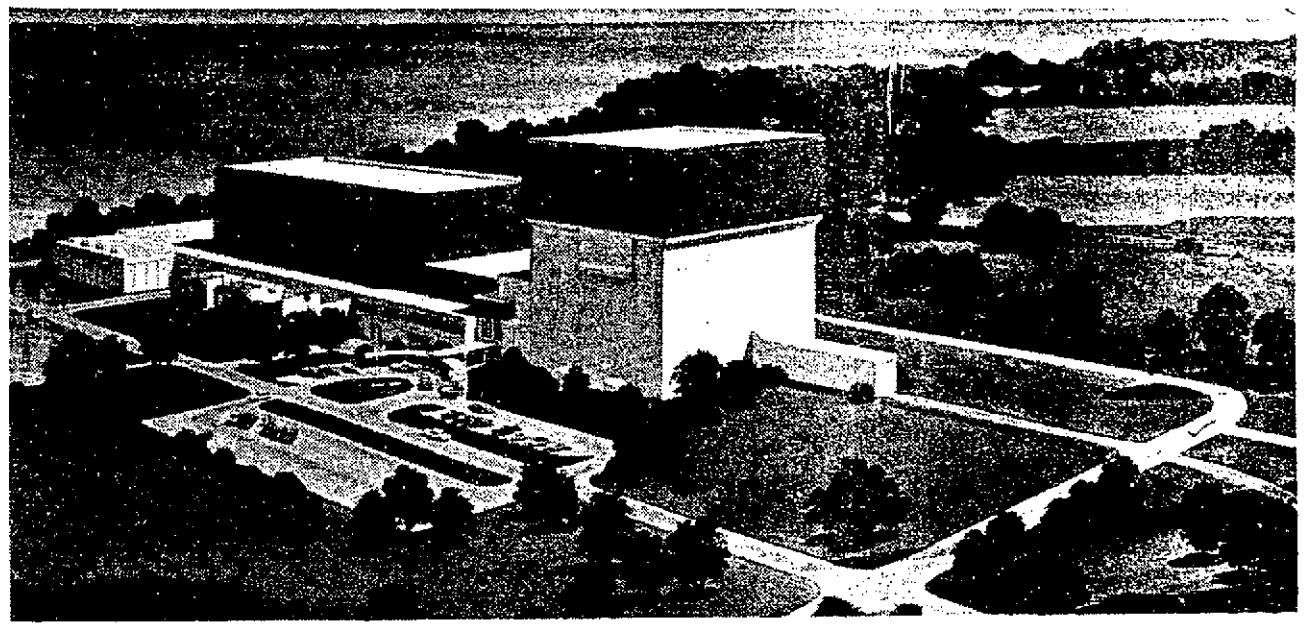

The fact is, more alternatives appear as intellectual energy is applied, with the wind and the tides and the geothermal heat from within the earth as yet only on the periphery of our concentrated search for applicable energy. There are preliminary reports that a local company is investigating the possibility of locating a pyrolysis plant in Saugerties to produce electrical energy from burning garbage, and that this garbage is to be drawn from all over the county. There are 26 landfill sites in Ulster County alone. Pyrolysis has been under study in neighboring Dutchess County for two years.

At present., the above are stillconsidered stopgap measures because it has not been shown that they can ba applied practically to provide the needs of our increasingly industrialized society. Woodstoves do not go very far toward heating New York City.

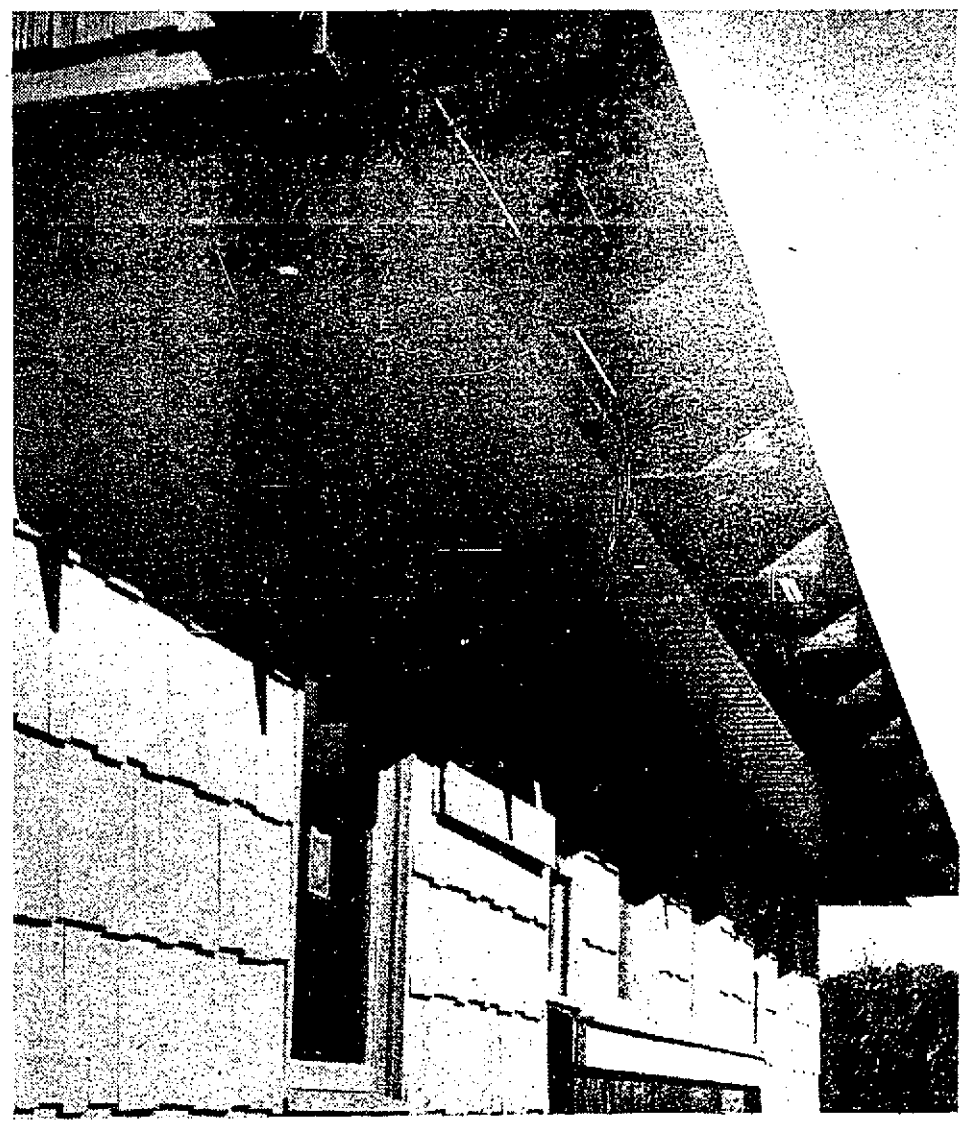

At these energy crossroads in the Mid-Hudson Valley there are two interrelated events scheduled for the near future that will probably have more to do with the path we take than all others combined: the use of the Lloyd site for nuclear power plant construction and , dwarfing even this decision, the planned construction of 16 new power plants throughout the state by the Empire State Power Resources, Inc., a new generating company formed by the seven largest private utilities in the state.

So swiftly are events moving, that the ERDA recommendation for Lloyd as the site of a nuclear plant and the ESPRI announcement both came this month after this series was begun. Public hearings on both are scheduled for January, 1976.

The Jewish Holiday - Hanukah

Hanukah (HAH-noo-kah) is a Jewish holiday that started on November 29.

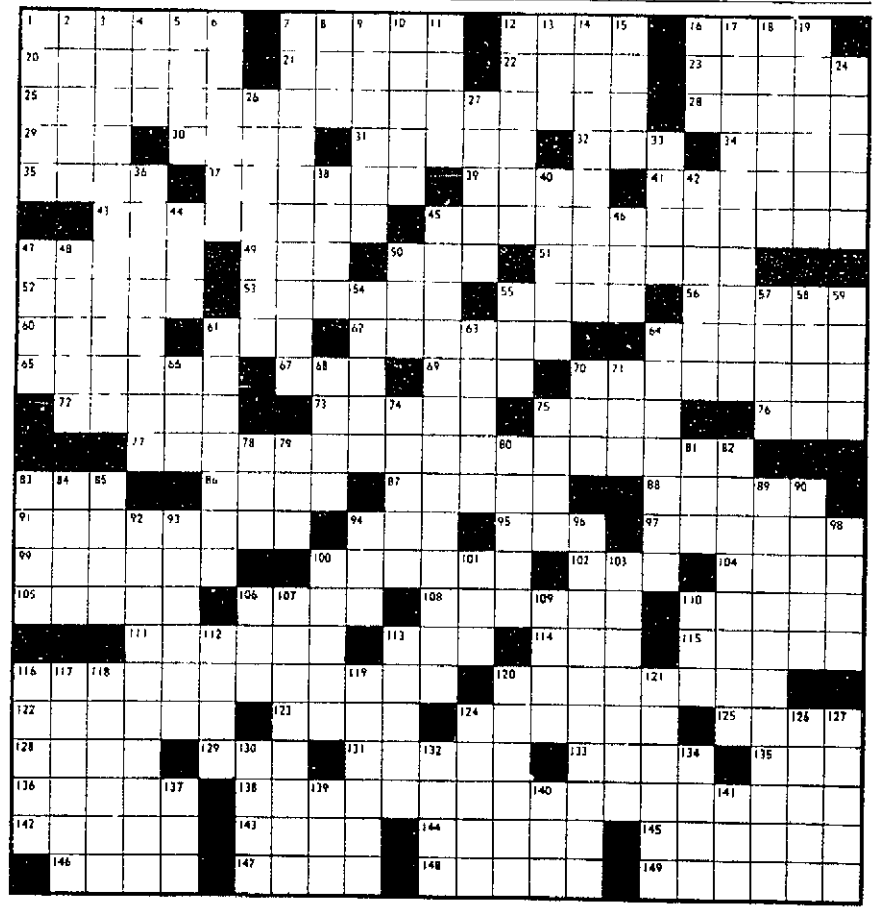

During Hanukah, Jewish boys and girls observe many customs.

One is lighting candles in a special candlestick, the Menorah. The Menorah holds eight candles with one place left over for the Shamash. The Shamash is the one candle used in lighting all the other candles.

On the first night of Hanukah, one candle is lit. On the second night, two candles are lit. This goes on eight happy nights. The candles burn until they go out. New candles are used each night.

The Jewish Holiday - Hanukah

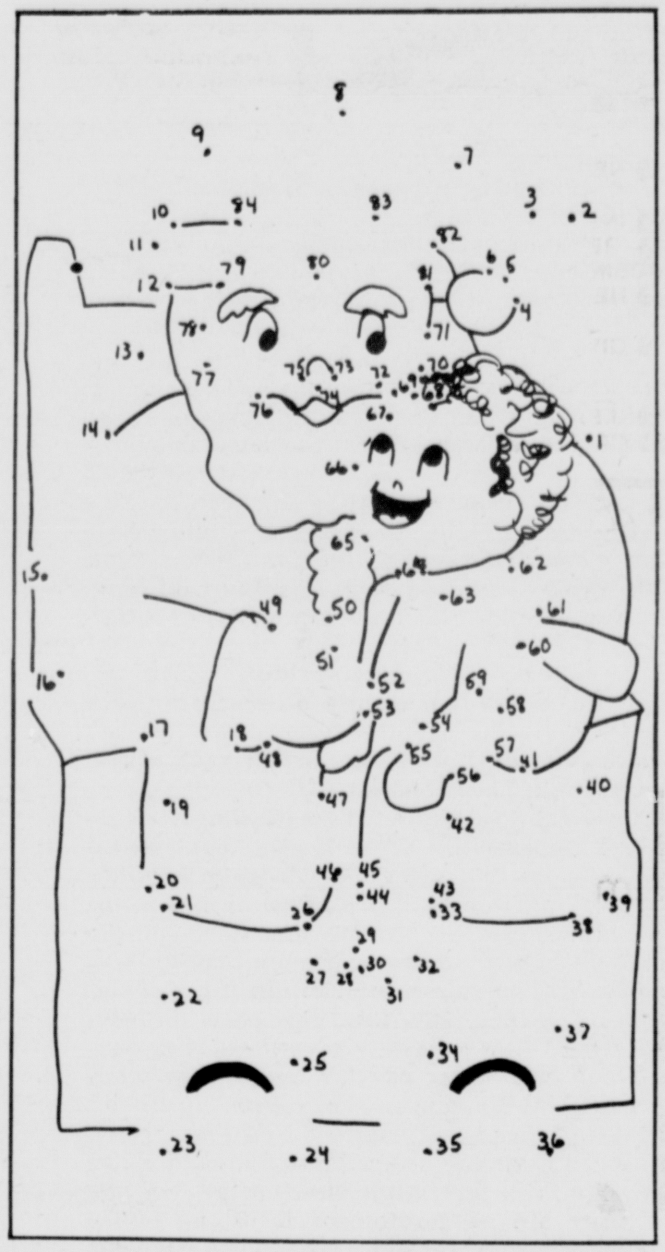

Hanukah (HAH-noo-kah) is a Jewish holiday that started on November 29.

During Hanukah, Jewish boys and girls observe many customs.

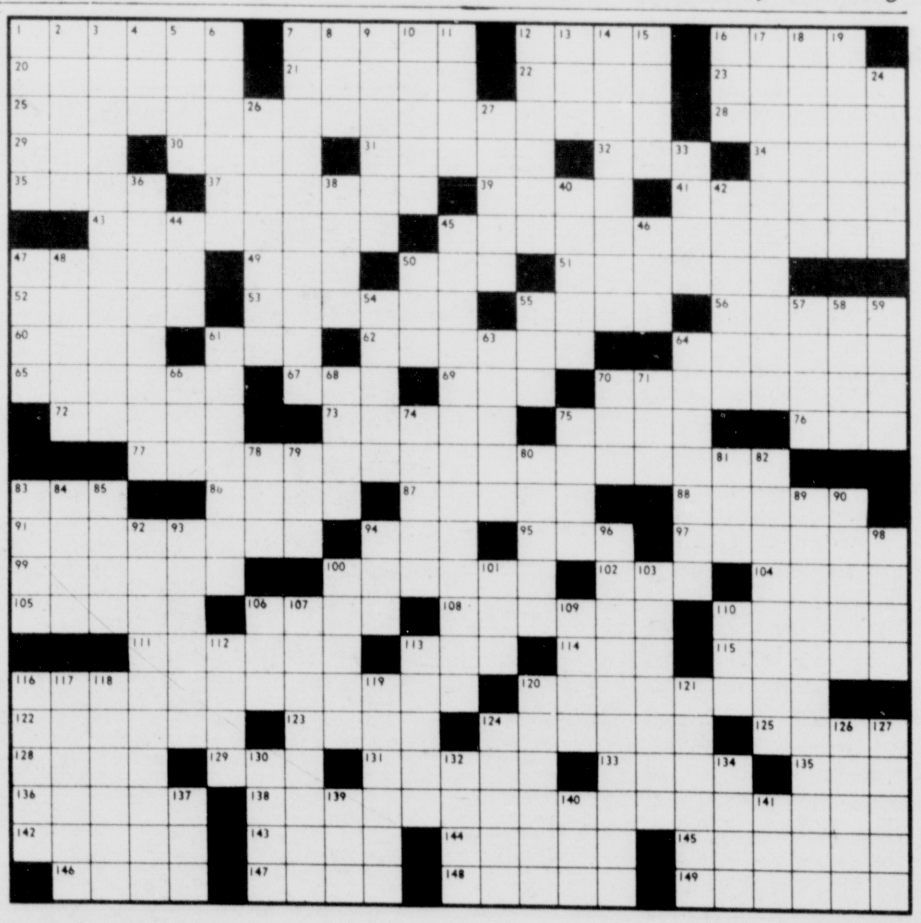

One is lighting candles in a special candlestick, the Menorah. The Menorah holds eight candles with one place left over for the Shamash. The Shamash is the one candle used in lighting all the other candles.

On the first night of Hanukah, one candle is lit. On the second night, two candles are lit. This goes on eight happy nights. The candles burn until they go out. New candles are used each night.

THE COP AND THE KID

Charles Durning (left) and Tierre Turner (right) star in NBC's new comedy series "The Cop and the Kid" The show will revolve around the misadventures of an unlikely duo-a hard-boiled bachelor cop, Frank Murphy and a street-wise young orphan, Lucas Adams, whose best pal is a dog named "Killer"

Overweight and middle-aged, Officer Murphy falls victim to an asthma attack while trying to apprehend a youthful black shoplifter The conscience-stricken youth aids the officer but is repaid promptly with arrest Lucas convinces the officer to testify on his behalf, but the trial has an unexpected outcome The judge decides Murphy is just the loving responsible father figure that Lucas needs, and the boy and his dog are put in the officer's custody

SANFORD AND SON

Fred Sanford meets his match in this week's episode of "Sanford and Son." In a kind of "Mini-Olympics," Fred is challenged to an arm-wrestling match with Senior Olympics Champion Lou Hunter, played by guest star Percy Rodrigues. Of course all the fuss is for the sole purpose of impressing Fred's girlfriend Donna (Lynn Hamilton). Grady gets into the act as coach and referee, while Lamont looks on with dismay. This week also marks the premiering of a series based on Whitman Mayo's character of Grady seen on Thursdays at 8:00 PM. "Grady" will co-star Carol Cole as his daughter and Joe Morton as his son-in-law.

A thought of New Orleans automatically invokes images of Mardi Gras, Bourbon Street, the Sugar Bowl and a jazz band playing "When the Saints Go Marching In."

The Mardi Gras and the Sugar Bowl are seasonal — they come just once a year. But Bourbon Street and the jazz bands are fixtures and will be as long as there is a French Quarter and musicians who refuse to let a great tradition die.

In the beginning the black musicians planted the jazz seed, nourished the plant and watched it bloom into glorious music. White musicians came along and pasteurized and homogenized the sound and it was good, too.

And although New Orleans is the City That Care Forgot the state laws prevented xlack and white musicians from playing in ~~the same band until the~~ legislation was overturned by the Supreme Court in the 1950s.

Of the jazz bands in New Orleans today one of the outstanding groups is a mixture of fine black and white musicians known as The French Market Jazz Band. They use their name as the title of their first recording (Flying Dutchman BDL 1-1239).

These young musicians are outstanding on the solo breaks, but they also play fine ensemble music on such standards as "Bourbon Street Parade," "Tin Roof Blues" and "That's a Plenty."

The two mutstanding numbers are "When the Saints Go Marching In" and "Just a Closer Walk With Thee," primarily because of the excellent arrangements by Scott Hill, the band's trombonist.

Hill begins "Saints" as a dirge, with keening, weeping and wailing by the horns before the band goes into a fast tempo. "Just a Clossr Walk With Thee" calls for solos by Hill, Donald Tidwell on tuba, Frank Trapani on trumpet, veteran Johnnie Mince on clarinet and David Lastie, Sr., on tenor sax.

Hot Rock Band; 'I Enjoy Playing'

Charlie Daniels likes a lot of things. He likes the Tennessee hills east of Nashville and Red Man chewing tobacco and Acme cowboy boots and extralarge blue jeans. He likes playing his guitar — a 1958 Les Paul Gibson — best of all.

"Yeah, I enjoy playin'," he suys. "Wasn't for bein' gone from mama and the baby, I'd do it all the time. But music's secondary to them."

Since Daniels and his hot Southern rock band spend about 250 days a year on the road, doing one-nighters in every conceivable kind of town and city (they put 8,000 miles on their new bus in the first three weeks they had it), you might say music is just barely secondary.

Charlie Daniels' music is in the mainstream of Southern rock: powerful, rhythmic and built around long, jazz-like improvisations. The voice is strictly another instrument and regardless of the effort put into lyrics, they rank behind lengthy solos and the overall driving sound.

Southern bands enjoy jamming with one another — and this intramural cross-pollenization has distilled the music, until it resembles the fine Tennessee sippin' whiskey of which Daniels is so fond.

And although the Charlie Daniels Band is not the most well known of the Southern bands (that honor pikely would go to the Allmans), it does seem to occupy a pivotal position.

Witness Daniels' famous "Volunteer Jam," which seems to be turning into the major annual event of Southern music, attracting musicians from any number of other groups (the Allmans, Wet Willie, Marshall Tucker, Grinder Switch — even Alvin Lee of Ten Years After), for several hours of unlimited powerplaying.

In the middle of it all mn stage is Daniels himself, first on guitar, then on fiddle with his stunning double-time version of "The Orange Blossom Special," ulways moving with an agility of feet and fingers startling in one with so much— uh, surplus flesh.

Charlie Daniels has been playing professionally for about half of his 39 years, honing a reputation as one of the finest guitar and fiddle players in the world. But it's been a long, hard climb.

"I started doing rock about the time Little Richurd, Fats Domino and Elvis Presley started coming up. I made a living playing clubs for a long time."

The Charlie Daniels Band was signed to a contract with Capitol Records. Their first effort wasn't bad, but they had no name appeal and soon came to a parting of the ways. Buddah made them an offer and the CDB has cut four solid LPs on that label, including the recent "Night Rider" and the very successful "Fire on th Mountain."
